

RAJASTHAN UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

DATE LABEL

A-9.2

Call No. U.231

Accn. No. 78877

Date of Release for loan

This book should be returned to the library on or before the date last stamped below, failing which fine as per University Library Rules will be charged.

[illegible]

GAZETTEER
OF THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY

VOLUME IX. PART II.

GUJARÁT POPULATION:

MUSALMÁNS AND PÁRSIS.

UNDER GOVERNMENT-ORDERS.

BOMBAY:
PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS,
1899.

THIS Volume on the people of Gujarát includes two parts: Part I. THE MUSALMÁNS contributed by Khán Bahádur Fazál-ullah Lutfullah Faridi, Assistant Collector of Customs, Bombay, and Part II. THE PÁRSIS, the joint contribution of the late Mr. Kharsedji Nasarvanji Seervai, J.P., a former Collector of Income Tax, Bombay, and Khán Bahádur Bamanji Behramji Patel also of Bombay.

JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

July 1899.

CONTENTS.

GUJARÁT MUSALMÁNS.

Chapter I.—Origin and Strength :	PAGE
FOREIGNERS—HINDU CONVERTS 	1-5
Chapter II.—Subdivisions:
SECTION I.—FOREIGN AND PART-FOREIGN MUSALMÁNS :
REGULAR CLASSES	6-11
Sayads, 7; Shaikhs, 8; Mughals, 9; Patháns, 10.
SPECIAL COMMUNITIES	11-18
Sídís, 11; Wakhábís, 12; Kábulis, 13; Náiatás, 14; Agarás and Others; Arabs, 15; Balúchís, 17; Mak- ránís; Mirdhás, 18.
SECTION II.—HINDU CONVERTS :
I.— RELIGIOUS COMMUNITIES	19-24
Beggars, 19; Abdáls; Nakshbands; Benawás, 20; Híjdás, 21; Husaini Bráhmans; Kalandars; Madá- ris, 22; Músa Suhágs; Rafáls, 23; Rasúlsháhís, 24.
II.— TRADING COMMUNITIES	24-57
BOHORÁS : Dáúdi; Sulaimáni; Alia; Nágoshi; Jaáfari, 24-35.
DU'DWÁLÍS; KARÁLÍS, 35-36.
KHOJÁHS : Origin and History; Appearance; Dress; Character; Calling; Customs; Marriage; Death; Religion; Taxes; Holidays, 36-50.
MEMANS : History; Appearance; Character; Dress; Food; Beliefs; Calling, 50-57.
III.— LANDHOLDERS	58-70
Behlím; Bohorás, 58; Kákápurís; Gámotís; Gíker- mehdis, 62; Kasbátís, 64; Khokharís; Makwánás, 65; Maliks; Matin Kanbis, 66; Molesalámás; Parmárs, 68; Ráthors; Šamás; Shaikhdás, 69; Solankís; Sumrás; TánEs, 70.

Chapter II.—Subdivisions—continued.

PAGE

SECTION II.—HINDU CONVERTS—continued.

IV.—CRAFTSMEN 70-80

Bandhárás; Bhádbhunjá; Chháspás, 71; Chundadigirás; Chúnárás; Chudiwálás, 72; Ghánchis; Kághzis, 73; Kadiás; Kasáis, 74; Kharádis; Khátkis; Luhárs; Maniárs, 75; Momnás, 76; Múltánis and Múltáni Mochis, 77; Nálbands; Pánjnigárs; Hir Pánjnigárs, 78; Rangrez; Saláts; Sonis, 79; Táis, 80.

V.—SERVANTS 80-85

Behrúpiás; Bhánds, 80; Bhattís; Bhawayyás; Gandhraps, 81; Kámáliás; Madáris, 82; Mírs or Mirásts; Sipáhis, 83; Tashchis; Turki Hajáms, 84.

VI.—LABOURERS 85-90

Banjhárás, 85; Chátlás; Chhárás; Dháldhoyás, 86; Gorkhodiás; Kathiárás; Máchhis, 87; Mális; Mapárás; Nágoris; Nats, 88; Pakhális; Shishahgars, 89; Thoris, 90.

Chapter III.—Style of Living :

SECTION I.—THE HOUSE :

Rich ; Middle Class ; Poor	91-95
SERVANTS	96-97
ANIMALS	97-99.

SECTION II.—DRESS :

Rich Man ; Middle Class Man ; Poor Man ; Rich Woman ; Middle Class Woman ; Poor Woman ; Children	100-108
--	-----	-----	-----	---------

SECTION III.—FOOD :

Rich ; Middle Class ; Poor ; Marketing ; Cost ; Stimulants ; Meals ; Feasts ; Public Dinners ; Feast Day Dinners	103-115
--	-----	-----	-----	---------

Chapter IV.—Daily Life :

Men ; Women	116-117
-------------	-----	-----	-----	---------

Chapter V.—Occupation :

Census Details (1872) ; General condition of the different classes under Professions ; Service ; Land ; Trade ; Crafts ; Women ; Monopolies	118-123
---	-----	-----	-----	---------

Chapter VI.—Condition :

Thrill ; Indebtedness	121
-----------------------	-----	-----	-----	-----

CONTENTS.

iii

Chapter VII.—Religion :	PAGE
Sunnis and Shiâhs ; Points of Difference ; Belief ; Practice ; Vows ; Shrine Vows ; Genii and Fairy Vows ; Religious Buildings ; Religious Officers, The Priest, The Elagy Singer, The Preacher, The Law Doctor, The Registrar ; Holy Days, Muharram, Tera or Talaa Tezi, Wafât, Manlûd, Ramazân I'd, Bakri I'd, I'd i-ghadir ; Early Beliefs, Possession, Magic, Omens	... 125 - 146
Chapter VIII.—Customs :
Pregnancy ; Exorcist Amil ; Seventh and Ninth Month Rites ; Behlâm Vow ; Earthen Dish Rite Kanduri ; Boat Offering Nâos ; Sex Divination by Milk ; Birth ; Naming ; Sacrifice ; Fortieth Day ; Salt Tasting ; Birth Day ; Initiation ; Circumcision ; First Ramazân Fast ; The Hadya Present ; Betrothal ; Marriage ; Divorce ; Death ; Mourning ; Pilgrimage	... 147 - 171
Chapter IX.—Amusements :
Field Sports ; Gymnastics ; House Games ; Music ; Acting ; Reading	... 172 - 174
Chapter X.—Community :
In Religion, Calling, Amusement	... 175
Chapter XI.—Prospects	... 176

. GUJARÁT PÂRSIS.

Introduction	... 183
Section I.—Early History :
First Settlement in India (700) ; Settlement at Sanjân (716) ; Fall of Sanjân and Flight of the Pârsis (1315) ; Changa Asa's Religious Zeal ; European Accounts (1500-1600) ; Emperor Akbar converted to the Pârsi Faith (1578) ; European Accounts (1600-1700) ; Religious Disputes	... 188 - 194
Section II.—Settlements :
(1600-1800) ; (1700-1800) ; A. Pârsi Martyr ; Pârsi Prosperity (1600) ; Pârsi Success in Bombay (1799-1898) ; Pârsis as Colonists and Merchants	... 195 - 200

	PAGE
Section III.—Appearance	201
Dress and Ornaments	201-203
Speech	203-204
Section IV.—House	205-206
Food	206-207
Section V.—Daily Life	208-210
Section VI.—Religion :
Sacred Books ; Leading Beliefs ; Temples ; Sacred Fires , Atesh Dádghán , Aderan , Atesh Behrá m ; Objects of Veneration ; High Festival Days , Jasans ; Season Festi- vals , Gahambárs , Gáthás , Muktad Holidays , Leading High Days ; Observances ; Early Beliefs	211-220
Section VII.—The Priesthood :
Genealogical Tree ; Distribution ; Higher and Lower Sacerdotal Orders ; Ordination, Herbad or Under Priest ; Mobed or Full Priest	221-226
Section VIII.—Customs :
Pregnancy ; Birth ; Góth's Vows ; Navroz Initiation ; Betro- thal ; Fore-marriage Observances ; Marriage ; Polygamy ; Death	227-243
Section IX.—Community	244-245
Appendix I.—Fire Temples	247-251
Appendix II.—Towers of Silence	252-254

INDEX.

MUSALMÁNS	255-276
PÁRSIS	277-298

GUJARÁT MUSALMÁNS

FROM THEIR

EARLIEST SETTLEMENT IN A.D. 634 TO
THE PRESENT PERIOD (A.D. 1898)

BY

KHÁN BAHÁDUR FAZALULLAH LUTFULLAH.

MUSALMÁNS.

GUJARÁT MUSALMÁNS.

CHAPTER I.

ORIGIN AND STRENGTH.

ACCORDING to the latest figures (A.D. 1891), Gujarát Musalmáns number about 1,113,000 or 10·07 per cent of the population. The following statement shows their distribution :

GUJARÁT MUSALMÁNS : DISTRIBUTION, 1891.

DISTRICT.	PARTLY FOREIGN.				LOCAL CONVERTS.			TOTAL.
	Sayads.	Shaikhhs.	Pantháns.	Mughals.	Mehmáns.	Bohorás.	Khajás.
Ahmedábád ...	3573	34,846	7180	330	1268	10,872	2085	99,487
Kaira ...	3263	11,016	10,617	791	143	13,620	5	77,443
Panch Maháls...	460	3359	2118	145	20	4216	9	18,651
Broach...	2472	14,235	4563	309	111	33,357	118	71,263
Surat ...	1550	27,670	2683	367	604	12,905	...	62,397
Total ...	11,680	61,135	27,071	5032	2141	73,950	2735	310,151
States ...	37,089	46,588	35,670	4418	56,441	69,767	43,618	603,823
Total ..	99,669	137,713	66,741	6150	53,582	142,767	46,353	1,113,447

No separate details are available for the different States.

Gujarát Musalmáns may be divided into two main sections, those who have a foreign strain and those who are almost entirely of local Hindu descent.

From the middle of the seventh to the end of the eighteenth century foreign Musalmáns continued to find their way into Gujarát.¹

¹ Before the arrival of Muhammadan Arabs in India Arab settlements are recorded at Cheul Kalyán and Supárá. Abul-Fida (A.D. 1273-1343) speaks of the Arabs being settled in Supárá in very early times. Reinaud's Abul-Fida, II. cccl.-xxxiv. In the time of Agatharcides B.C. 177-100 (Vincent's Periplus, 151) there were so many Arabs on the Malabár coast that the people had adopted the Arab religion. Ptolemy's map of India, A.D. 150, has a trace of the Arabs in the word Meliceris, the latter part of the name being the Arabic Jasirah an island (Tháma Gazetteer, XIII. 61 note 1). Before they adopted Islám the Arabs were mostly Sabians. Sale (Preliminary Discourse to the Kurán, 10) says that though there were idol-worshippers Jews Magians and Christians among the Arabs of the "times of ignorance," the Sabian religion had overrun the whole (Arab) nation. The first expedition of Muhammadan Arabs to India, A.D. 636, was sent in the reign though not with the sanction of Umar the son of Ehattáb, A.D. 634-643, the second Khalifah. When he heard that Uthmán-ath-Thakafi his governor of Bahrein had sent an expedition which returned successful from Hind the Khalifah wrote to Uthmán : "Brother of Thakif ! thou hast placed the worm in the wood, but by Alláh ! had any of my men been lost I should have killed an equal number" from thy tribe" (Al-Bilázuri (A.D. 910)

Chapter I.
Origin and Strength.

FOREIGNERS.

Chapter I.
Origin and Strength.
FOREIGNERS.

The first to arrive were Arabs, the sailors and soldiers of the Baghdad fleets sent in the seventh eighth and ninth centuries to plunder and conquer the Gujarāt coasts. The next comers, traders mostly from the Persian Gulf, were during the ninth and tenth centuries established in considerable numbers in the chief Gujarāt cities. Encouraged to settle by the Rajpūt kings of Anahilavāḍa, these merchants were treated with much consideration and allowed to manage their affairs, to practise their religion, and to build mosques.¹ Next from the north came the Musalmān invaders of the eleventh and twelfth centuries.² But except in a few of the coast towns, till its final conquest by Alif Khān in A.D. 1297, there would seem to have been but a very small Musalmān population in Gujarāt.³ From the end of the in Elliot, I. 116). The prejudice of Umar against India seems to have been due to accounts he had heard from Arab travellers of the difficulty of the passage of an army to India through Kirmān. Immediately after the battle of Kadesia (H. 14, A.D. 636) when he sent Utbah his first governor to the newly founded Basrah, the Khalifah Umar said to Utbah: "I am sending thee to the land of Al-Hind (India) as governor. Remember it is a field of the fields of the enemy." About the same period Umar asking an Arab philosopher his opinion of India received the reply: "It is a remote land of rebellious infidels" (Al-Mas'ūdī's Murūj, Arabic Text, III. 171. Cairo Edn.) This impression prevailed till so late as the reign of the Umayyad Abdu-l-Malik (A.D. 685-706), when Ibn-i-Kiriyāh gave the following epigrammatic account of Al-Hind and Khurāsān to Hajjāj the son of Eūsuf: "The sea of Al-Hind is pearls, its rocks are rubies, its trees the sweet-smelling aloes and its leaves perfumed, but its people are like a flock of helpless pigeons, and the way to it lies through Khurāsān whose waters are snows and whose population is an ever-active enemy" (Ibn-i-Kiriyāh in Ibn-i-Khalkikān, Arabic Text 122). About A.D. 636 the Arab governor of Balrein fitted out two fleets against the ports of the gulf of Cambay. In A.D. 730 Broach was attacked. In A.D. 753 and 773 fleets were sent against the Kāthiavāḍa coast; and about A.D. 830 Sindan, probably in Kachh, was taken and held for some years. Elliot's History, I. 15, 415, 416, 444, 460. According to one account in A.D. 724 the Arabs passed inland and conquered Ujjain (Elliot, I. 442). This may possibly be the Jūnāgadh hill of Ujjānta or Gīrnār. But when we see that the Chāch-nāmah (Elliot, I. 167-208) mentions the conquest of Jaipur and Udaipur by Muhammad son of Kāsim in the reign of the Umayyad Al-Walid (A.D. 705-715) and that Colonel Tod (Rajasthān, I. 207 [1893] Calcutta Edition) states from Hindu sources that Ujjain was an appanage of Chitor when Chitor was attacked by Muhammad Kāsim, it is possible that the Arab conqueror of Sindh might have carried his raid into the interior as far as Ujjain.

¹ The traveller Sulaimān (A.D. 851) says that the Balhāra, that is the Rāshtrakūṭa (A.D. 752-873) of Malkhet in the Dakkhin, then sovereign of Gujarāt, was of all kings most partial to Arabs; Al-Mas'ūdī (A.D. 916) found Islam honoured and protected. On all sides, he says, rise chapels and splendid mosques where the daily five prayers can be prayed. Meynard's Prairies d'Or, I. 382. At Sainūr, probably Chul about thirty miles south of Bombay, were 10,000 Musalmāns chiefly from the Persian Gulf; Ibn-i-Haukal (A.D. 943) found mosques at Anahilavāḍa, Cambay, and Sindan; and Al-Idrisi (A.D. 1070-1100) says Nahrwān or Anahilavāḍa was frequented by large numbers of Musalmān traders. Elliot's History, I. 5, 24, 27, 34, 38, 68, and Renan's Mémoires sur L'Inde, 220.

² Mahmūd Ghaznavi (A.D. 1025) and Kutb-ud-dīn-Ellak (A.D. 1191).

³ In spite of the injuries done them by Musalmān invaders, the Rajpūt kings of Anahilavāḍa continued to treat Musalmān traders with much kindness. Muhammad Ghā (A.D. 1211) tells how Sidhrāj (A.D. 1091-1143) inquired into an attack on some Musalmān traders in Cambay, punished the Hindus, and gave the Musalmāns money to build a new mosque. Elliot's History, II. 164. Some of the Hindu chiefs would also seem to have engaged Musalmān mercenaries. In A.D. 1264 the ruler of Sonmāth is said to have had several Musalmān officers, among them a naval captain nakhwa. (Forbes' Ras Mala, I. 276.) And one branch of the Ahmedabad Bāsatis is descended from Khordāsai soldiers of fortune who took service under the Vaghela kings of Anahilavāḍa (A.D. 1216-1297). How commonly Hindu chiefs used Musalmān mercenaries is shown by Alā-ud-dīn's excuse for (A.D. 1294) entering the Dakhan, that he was on his way to take service with the raja of Rājamaṇḍri. Elphinstone's History of India (1837 Edition), 332.

thirteenth to the end of the seventeenth century, both by land and sea foreign Musalmán soldiers, traders, refugees, and slaves kept flocking into Gujarát.¹ Most of them coming single were absorbed into the general Musalmán population. In modern times three events have, on a somewhat larger scale, added to the foreign element of the Musalmán population of the province. These are, towards the close of the eleventh century the arrival from Yaman in Arabia with a band of followers of the religious head of the Shiáh trading Bohorás; about the middle of the seventeenth century the establishment at Surat of the Zanjira Sídís as admirals of the Mughal fleet; and during the eighteenth century the influx of Arab mercenaries and of several bands of Persian political refugees.²

Of the local converts some were persuaded and others were forced to adopt Islám. From time to time Muhammadan missionaries and men of learning, coming either of their own accord or invited by the rulers of Gujarát, succeeded in winning to their faith large bodies of Hindus.³ As regards conversion by force, Alif Khán

Chapter I.
Origin and Strength.
FOREIGNERS.

HINDU
CONVERTS.

¹ The ports of Gujarát being the "Gates of Makkah" (Abwáb-ul-Makkah) for the Muslim pilgrims of Central Asia Persia and Khurásán many foreign Musalmán families used to settle in Gujarát on their return from the holy places. As a notable example of these settlements the Mirat-i-Ahmádi (Persian Text, II. 22) recounts the case of Sheikh Ahmed Khattú of Sarkhez, one of the four saintly founders of the city of Ahmedábád. The bulk of these were adventurers in search of service as soldiers. In A.D. 1531 Bahádúr had Turks and Abyssinians in his army (Bird's Gujarát, 272), and Habshis and Afgháns were among the Gujarát troops that opposed the emperor Akbar in A.D. 1672; Elliot, V. 366. According to Barbosa, who visited Gujarát in A.D. 1514, the cavalry were Turks Mamelukes Arabs Persians Khurásánis and Turkománs. Others came from Delhi and some belonged to Gujarát. Stanley's Barbosa, 55-56. Traders would seem to have been encouraged to settle. One of them, A.D. 1321, is said to have been presented with lands at Navsári near Surat, and to have received the title of Malik-ut-tijjār or chief of the merchants. Rás Mála, I. 287.

² At the beginning of the present century (A.D. 1802) the Arab mercenaries were the only obstacle to the complete establishment of British influence in Gujarát. Bravo, but unruly, they numbered about 7000 men. A quarter of them were natives of Arabia, the rest were of Arab extraction born in Gujarát. With their defeat at Baroda (1802, Dec. 26th) the power of the Arab mercenaries came to an end. Rás Mála, II. 32 and 46. Of the Persian refugees to Cambay, James Forbes (A.D. 1781) says: Some left their country on its conquest by the Afgháns (A.D. 1723); others fled when (A.D. 1726) Nádir Sháh seized the throne of Persia; and several more (A.D. 1757) left Nádir's army on its return from India to Persia. Oriental Memoirs, III. 83. Persian mercenaries still come to Cambay as recruits for the Nawáb's Persian regiment.

³ Of these missionaries the most important was Abdalláh, who founded the sect of the Sháh Bohorás in Gujarát (A.D. 1067). Rás Mála, I. 344. Other distinguished teachers were, in A.D. 1165, Khájah Maín-ud-dín Chishtí, who finally settled at Ajmir, where he made many converts and died in A.D. 1235. Burton's Sindh, 213. Traditions of Mahmúd of Ghazni (A.D. 1023) converting the Rajpúts of north Gujarát, now called Maliks, still linger in that country. When Zafar Khán one of the trusty nobles of Sultán Firúz Sháh (A.D. 1351-1389) of Delhi conquered Gujarát (A.D. 1371) some learned men who accompanied him used arguments to make the people embrace the faith according to the doctrines of each as reverend the tradition of the Prophet (the Sunnah-wal-Jama'át). Hence it happened that some of the Bohorás converted to Shiátism in A.D. 1067 became Shiáhs. (Asiatic Researches, VII. 342). The next missionary was Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri who came to Gujarát in A.D. 1509, claiming to be the Imám Mehdi (Bird's Gujarát, 218); Sháh Álam, the ornament of Mahmúd Begoda's reign (A.D. 1459-1513); and Sháh Tahír the preceptor of Muzaffar II. (A.D. 1513-1526). Bird, 229; Bird, 218; and Sháh Álam, the ornament of Mahmúd Begoda's reign (A.D. 1459-1513). Type of the Gujarát sovereigns, Muzaffar in A.D. 1395 and Mahmúd Begoda in A.D. 1475 are specially mentioned as bringing learned men into Gujarát to spread the faith. Briggs' Farishtah, IV. 6, 66. And during the reign of the scholarly and accomplished Muzaffar II. (A.D. 1513-1526) men of letters from Persia Arabia and Turkey are said to have found it worth their while to settle in Gujarrat. Briggs' Farishtah, IV. 97. Imám Sháh of Pírána also made many converts. His father Karim-ud-din came from the Persian Irák to Ahmedabad. Sayad Imám-ud-din, his son, died at a village situated about eight miles south of Ahmedabad which probably in memory of his Karmatian origin he called كرمطه Karmathah and which is now called Karamthah. Imám Sháh's descendants continue to enjoy the spiritual headship of the Momans whom he converted. Imám Sháh's death anniversary still attracts large numbers of his followers to his shrine at Karamthah. Mirát-i-Ahmedi, II, 81-82 Persian Text. The Karmatians deserve in this place a short but special notice.

Chapter I. Origin and Strength.

HINDU CONVERTS.

(A.D. 1297-1317) introduced the Muhammadan faith from Anahilavada

In the Hijrah year 278 (A.D. 891), towards the end of the reign of the fifteenth Abbási Al-Mo'tamid Alallah, there appeared at the small village of Nahrein near Kúfa a poor and houseless wanderer who said he came from Khuzistán in Persia near Isfahán. The stranger settled in Nahrein and led a life of rigid austerity under the protection of a well-to-do greengrocer. Of religion the stranger, whose name was Ahmed, had peculiar notions, which showed themselves in the practise of rites and observances of extraordinary severity. Instead of the five daily prayers ordained by the law of Islám Ahmed preached and recited fifty. He said that Jesus had appeared to him in the body and declared unto him: Thou art the 'Invitation'; thou art the 'Demonstration'; thou art the 'Camel'; thou art the 'Beast'; thou art John the son of Zacharias; thou art the Holy Ghost. Ahmed never ate any thing that was not earned by the labour of his hands. After some years of this life Ahmed's preachings began to draw disciples. Though Ahmed continued to lead the same secluded and simple life, his teaching adopted a political tone inviting his followers to obey a certain Imám or leader of the Prophet's family. The obedience of his followers to his constant demand for almost prayer began to tell upon their habits and turned an industrious agricultural population into a band of mooping idlers. As this change lowered the revenues of the districts, which were paid in kind, the governor imprisoned Ahmed and discussed the necessity of putting him to death next morning. These counsels being overheard by one of the maids of the governor (possibly a secret follower of Ahmed's) she abstracted the keys of the prison from the sleeping governor's person and set Ahmed at liberty. Ahmed fled to Syria where his mysterious escape from confinement so magnified him in the eyes of his followers that his name became invested with supernatural greatness. About this time one of Ahmed's followers declared that his master had received a divine revelation. According to Ibní Asfr the message was in these words: In the name of Allah the Merciful, the Compassionate: So saith Al-Faraj the son of Uthmán who is from the village of Nasárah (or Nazareth) on inviter unto the Messiah, who is Jesus, who is the Word, who is the guide, who is Ahmed the son of Muhammad the son of Hanífab, and who is Gabriel. Ahmed laid down to his followers a new law abrogating that of the Prophet allowing them to drink wine, representing the precepts of the Kúrán to be allegorical, teaching that prayers were a symbol of obedience to the Imám, fasting a type of silence and concealment of religious dogmas from strangers, and fornication the sin of infidelity. These doctrines spread east to India and west to Africa and Spain. It was on the basis of kindred opinions that the structure of the Fatimite Ebláfat (A.D. 908-1171) was raised in Egypt and that the sister kingdoms of Máltán (A.D. 985) and of Mansúrah were founded in India. The sapling raised in the obscure village of Nahrein flourished for nearly two centuries. Then the western branch withered of inanition and the eastern arm was lopped by the scymitar of the Ghaznavi Mahmúd (A.D. 1005-6) and was destroyed never to shoot forth again by the deadly scythe of the Ghorí, Muhammad bin Sám (A.D. 1175). Of the name Karmatian (كرمطي) three derivations are given. Ibní Asfr (Al-Kámil, VII. 148) states that during his days of adversity at Nahrein Ahmed was once badly beaten by some of the villagers on account of some dispute about a crop of dates he was set to guard. Left almost for dead he was carried by a red-eyed villager, an owner of many bullocks, to his house and treated with kindness. He ever after during his stay at that village remained under the protection of his red-eyed patron. In the language of the Nabatean Arabs, which was in vogue at Nahrein, Karmatah means red-eyed and the patronised favorite of the pink-eyed lord of the steers was nicknamed Karmatiyah or the man belonging to the Karmatah. This seems to be the most sensible explanation. Others say that when Ahmed rose to be the head of a turbulent and powerful conspiracy the correspondence of that body was carried on in a cypher invented by him and that owing to its close lines and small characters the cypher was called karmat or concealed. The third explanation is that the name of the Karmatian prophet being Ahmed bin Muhammad consisted of crooked letters, Ahmed came to be called Karmat the crooked. (Ibní Asfr, VII. 148 and Sale's Kúrán Preliminary Discourse, 131-132.)

to Broach.¹ But his successors seem not to have been very active in spreading their religion. And it was partly because Farhat-ul-mulk, himself a converted Hindu, encouraged Hinduism, that in A.D. 1391 Zafar Khān, afterwards first king of Ahmedābād, was sent to govern Gujarāt. Of the Ahmedābād kings three, Sultān Ahmed (A.D. 1411 - 1441), Mahmūd Begada (A.D. 1459 - 1513), and Mahmūd II. (A.D. 1536 - 1547), specially exerted themselves to spread Islām,² and of the Mughal emperors, Jahāngir in A.D. 1618 and Aurangzib in A.D. 1646, attempted by persecution to force the Hindus to become Muhammadans.³

Chapter I.
Origin and Strength.

HINDU
CONVERTS.

¹ Bird's Gujarāt, 187. According to some accounts (Tod's Western India, 184, 191) more than one of the Anhilavāda kings was converted to Islām. And if it is true that he left only one temple standing in his dominions, Ajayapāda (A.D. 1174 - 1177) was by much the most zealous of all the Musalmān rulers of Gujarāt.

² Sultān Ahmed twice (A.D. 1414 - 1420) made fierce attempts to force the Hindus to adopt Islām. The Rajpūts who submitted were called Molesalāms and the Vaniās and Brāhmans joined the sect of Bohoris. Forbes' Rās Māla, I, 343. Mahmūd Begada probably did more to spread Islām than any of the Ahmedābād kings. But his efforts were among chiefs that had till then been independent rather than among his own subjects. Under Mahmūd II. the Muhammadan faith rose so superior that, at the end of his reign (A.D. 1547), no Hindu was allowed to ride on horseback and those on foot had to wear badges. They were prevented from worshipping publicly and from keeping the Holi or Devāli festivals. Forbes' Rās Māla, I, 387; Bird's Gujarāt, 267.

³ Jahāngir (A.D. 1618) persecuted the Ahmedābād Jains, destroyed their temples, and exalted Islām. Elliot's History, VI, 450. Aurangzib by his severe treatment of the Hindus caused such discontent that, in A.D. 1646, he was removed from the post of viceroy. Watson's History, 74. Writing of Surat in A.D. 1689, Ovington says: Aurangzib, from an implacable detestation of idolatry, had forbid in great measure the pagodas, and commanded both a defacing of them and suppressing the solemnities of their public meetings. Voyage to Surat, 293.

CHAPTER II.

SUBDIVISIONS.

Section I.—Foreign and Part-foreign Musalmāns.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.FOREIGN MUSALMĀNS,
REGULAR CLASSES.

THE section of the Gujarāt Musalmān population that claims some strain of foreign blood may, somewhat roughly, be arranged under two main groups; the four chief or regular classes commonly known as Sayads, Shaikhs, Mughals, and Pathāns, and seventeen special communities whose histories show them to be of partly foreign descent.¹

¹ The four regular communities claim wholly foreign descent. Of these the Sayads, the descendants of Fātimah and Ali, claim descent from forefathers, some of whom like the Eidrāsīs (now settled in Gujarāt and the Konkan) came direct from Arabia; others like the Bukhāris from descendants who came to Gujarāt through Central Asia and Sindh; or others like the Mashhādīs through Sayads who came from Khurāsān. In north Gujarāt Sayads of one class until very recently abstained from intermarriage with Sayads of other classes and most Sayads still (A.D. 1896) do not give their daughters in marriage to non-Sayads. According to the Mirāt-i-Ahmedi (N'eralam Text, II. 16-65 Pālanpur Edition) there are about ten chief Sayad families in Gujarāt:

(1) The Bukhāris whose first ancestor Sayad Burhān-ud-dīn Kutbī Alam, descended from Sayad Jāfār Muthanna, a brother of Imām Hasan Askari (born A.D. 859) came and settled at Pattan in north Gujarāt with his mother at the age of ten years in A.D. 1397. He removed from Pattan to Ahmedābād when that city was founded.

(2) The Kādirīs, whose first ancestor who came to India was Sayad Jamāl Pathrī the grandson of the great saint of saints of Gilān. Sayad Jamāl came through Ormuz to the Dakhan and was with great honour invited from the Dakhan to Gujarāt by Sultān Bahādūr about A.D. 1530.

(3) The Rifā'īs. The ancestor of the Rifā'īs who gained the glory of sainthood, Sayad Ahmed Kabir, was a nephew of the great saint of saints Sayad Abdūl-Kādir. One of his descendants settled in Ahmedābād during the fourteenth century of the Christian era. The precise date is not given by the Mirāt-i-Ahmedi.

(4) The Chishtīs are the descendants of the great saint of Ajamir Muḥsin-ud-dīn Chishtī, who is called the Prophet of India, he being one of the first Musalmān missionaries to settle in India (A.D. 1165).

(5) The Mashhādīs. Their ancestor Sayad Maḥammad Mirzā Shāh settled at Ahmedābād in A.D. 1637 and became a pupil of Meḥbūb-i-Alam, a grandson of Shāh-i-Alam. In Akbar's days the Mashhādīs of Dehlī had not a good name for honesty and they were deemed inordinately proud of their birth, as is shown by a Persian proverb quoted by Blochman (Ain-i-Akbari, 382 note 1): "Oh men of Mashhad except your Imām (Mūsā Razā, the eighth Shī'ah Imām from whom they claim descent) Allah's curse on you all!" Ahl-i-Mashhad bajaz Imām shumā, Ladnat-ul-lāh bar taunāmi shumā.

(6) The Shirdīs are descended from Sayad Ahmed son of Jāfār who lived the life of a hermit subsisting on leaves of trees and is said to have possessed power to perform miracles. He came and settled in Gujarāt in the days of Humāyūn (A.D. 1535-1538).

(7) The Uzairīs are descended from Sayad Budha Yaakub who was the nephew of the famous "Kāling"-rider the commandant of cavalry who first planted the banner of Islam on the heights of Tarāgnth the hill citadel of Ajmer (A.D. 1165). Sayad Budha lived in the days of Sultān Ahmed of Gujarāt (A.D. 1411-1443).

Besides these families the Mirāt mentions the Eidrāsīs, the Tirmidīs and the Bukhāris, without giving dates of their settlement.

Among schismatic Sayads the Mirāt-i-Ahmedi gives the name of Sayad Muḥammad,

The men of each of the four regular classes whose home tongue is in all cases Hindustāni, though their style of features shades off so that no well-marked line divides them, may still in most cases be known by some characteristic look, some special way of wearing the hair, or some peculiarity of dress. On the other hand the women of all the four classes, except the relations of lately come Pathāns who are larger and fairer, and the poor whose features have been hardened by want and toil, differ little in appearance. In height they are somewhat under the middle size, the complexion, except among the Broach women who are unusually fair, is wheat coloured, the hair long and always black, the eyebrows arched and almost meeting, the eyes large and languishing, the nose straight and well cut, the mouth rather large and heavy, the teeth regular, the expression pleasing combining pertness with languor, the waist slim, and the limbs full and rounded.

Sayads, with a total strength of 35,744, are found in all parts of Gujurāt. Claiming descent from Fātimah and Ali, the daughter and son-in-law of the Prophet, they are the representatives of the Sayads, who, during the period of Musalmān rule in Gujurāt, as religious teachers soldiers and adventurers, flocked into the province from Turkey Arabia and Central Asia. They are of middle size, most of them muscular and of spare habit. The head is often shaved, but, when allowed to grow, the hair has a natural curl. The beard is worn full by religious teachers and short by soldiers constables and messengers.

Sayads mark their high birth by among men placing the title Sayad or Mir before, or Shāh after, and among women the title Begum after their names. Their sons take wives from any of the four chief Musalmān classes and sometimes, though rarely, from among the higher of the local or irregular Muslim communities. As a rule a Sayad's daughter marries only a Sayad, and among some exclusive classes of Sayads, family trees are examined and every care taken that the accepted suitor is a Sayad both on the father's and mother's side. As a class Sayads are truthful and honest, sober, idle, fond of pleasure and thriftless, a quality which they misname resignation or tanakkul; as the proverb says 'If we have money we are lords; if we have no money we are beggars; if we die we are saints, Daulat mile to mēr, nahīn to fakīr, marūn to Pīr.' Sayads follow all callings. The poor among them act as servants or as messengers and constables. But most of them, as the descendants of saints, hold towards a certain number of families the position of spiritual guides pīrs. Except

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
REGULAR CLASSES.

Sayads.

more commonly styled Rājo Shāhid or Rājo the Martyr, who (A.D. 1667) arrived in Gujurāt from Jaunpur in the North-West Provinces and obtained a position of distinction and honour in the court of Aurangzib, then viceroy of Gujurāt. When the bigoted prince heard of the Mahdavi opinions of the Sayad he dismissed him the service and ordered him to leave the country forthwith. The Sayad counting on his followers who were numerous in the city as well as in Pālanpur disregarded the orders and a skirmish ensuing, was killed. The rulers of Pālanpur disregarded the orders and cotton-clothes of Dhokla and Māndal, and the dyers and some of the weavers of Ahmedābād hold the Mahdavi faith. The chief quarters of Mahdavi Sayads in Gujurāt are Pālanpur, Ahmedābād, Baroda, and Dabhoi.

Chapter II:
Subdivisions.

FOREIGN MUSALMANS.

REGULAR CLASSES,
Sayads.

these religious teachers who as a class are well-to-do and some of them rich, Sayads, from their want of thrift and from their fondness for resignation inwaktul, are depressed and badly off.¹ In religion Sayads are both Sunnis and Shiáhs. In Surat and Broach the majority are Sunnis. But in north Gujarát though all profess to be Sunnis, most of them are Shiáhs at heart. The Shiáh Sayads form a distinct community, their chief bond of union being the secret celebration of Shiáh religious rites. As a class Sayads are by their profession obliged to show that they are religious and careful to observe all the rites enjoined by the Kuraán. Almost all Sayads, especially those who live in towns, show themselves ready to send their children to Government schools and universities where some of them have succeeded in graduating (A.D. 1893), some of them are now learning English, and a few have risen to high positions in Government service.

Shaikhs.

Shaikhs, numbering 88,006, are found in every part of the province. Meaning Elder, the title Shaikh belongs strictly only to three branches of the Kuraish family; the Siddikis, who claim descent from Abú Bakar Siddik; the Fárúkis,² who claim descent from Umar Al Fárúk; and the Abbásis from Abbás, one of the Prophet's nine uncles. The word Shaikh is a general term of courtesy corresponding to the English esquire, and in India includes the descendants of local converts as well as of foreigners.³ The men have the title Shaikh or Muhammad placed before their names and the women Bibi after theirs. In so large a class there is much variety of appearance, and as a whole they are hardly to be distinguished from Sayads. They are sober, fairly truthful and honest, and, though fond of show and pleasure, are less careless in their money dealings than most Musalmāns. According to a North Indian Urdu proverb, 'The Shaikh is as sly as a crow.' They follow all callings and are found in every grade of life. Many are devout Muslims. Except by the tie of a common faith Shaikhs are in no way bound together as a community. Almost all are anxious to give their children some education, and of late years the number of children learning English and attending Government schools and universities has much increased. Some of them have risen to high posts under Government.

¹ Though as a descendant of the Prophet it is thought dishonourable for a Sayad to beg, there is in Gujarát one class of Sayad beggars belonging to the Bukhári stock. These are called after their village of Batwa in the Daskroi sub-division of Ahmedábad. The pages of the Mirát-i-Sikandari and other histories of Gujarát are replete with the honourable and distinguished part their ancestors took in the politics of Unjáta. The Ahmedábad Sultans and the whole of the Gujarát army were their spiritual followers. See Mirát-i-Sikandari Persian Text, 363-64. Many of them now wander over Gujarát in bands of two or five chiefly during the month of Ramazán, and are famous for their skill in inventing tales of distress. Most of them are well-to-do but thrifless.

² The Fárúkis include two branches, the Chishtis and the Faráhis; the former descendants of Shaikh Nizám-ud-din Chishti, the latter of Shaikh Faríd-ud-din Shirkanj. Many of both these families, owing to their forefathers' name for holiness, are spiritual guides pirzaddas, and have large numbers of followers. In Itádhampur a class of unknown origin call themselves "Tolia" Shaikhs. They wet their kafan or shroudlike shirt in oil, and drink quantities of oil, pretending that their bowels are proof against its aperient action. They go about villages begging.

³ Of the Shaikhs the Mirát-i-Ahmedi mentions (1) the Siddikis, (2) the Fárúkis, (3) the Chishtis, (4) the Abbásis, and (5) the Kuraishis. Of these the Siddikis, the Fárúkis, the greater part of the Chishtis and the Abbásis are generally of pure foreign descent, being descendants of Arab settlers. Some of the Chishtis and the Kuraishis though they may include some descendants of foreign Musalmáns are mostly the children of converted Hindus. Chisht being the name of the Sáfí or mystic school founded by Maulána Muín-ud-din Chishti of Ajmere all the followers of that school, though descendants of converted Hindus, call themselves Chishtis. Kuraish is the name of the noble Arab tribe to which the Prophet belonged. On the strength of the Prophet's tradition (hadith) that "all converts to my faith are of me and my tribe," the descendants of all Hindu and other converts to Islam call themselves Kuraishis. Of Abbásis there are few in India. The Mirát-i-Ahmedi (II. 85) notices the Kuraishis of Thára in the Kára district and the Jindaráns, vulgarly called Jhadráns (a class of foreign Patháns) settled in the neighbourhood of Pálanpúr and the Gálkár districts of Unjáta, to be two classes of foreign settlers who were assigned lands by the Sultáns of Gujarát in military tenure in those districts. The Jindaráns who believe themselves to be descendants of settlers who came from Mázindarán in Persia are still handsome and fair-skinned, robust and

Mughals numbering 3488 include two distinct classes, the Persian and the Indian or Chughadda¹ Mughals. Except a few in Ahmedābād and Broach, Persian Mughals are found chiefly in Cambay and Surat. They are the descendants of Persian political refugees and merchants. Mughals always place the title Mirza, born of a great man, before their names and add Beg, lord, as Mirza Muhammad Beg; the women add Khānam to their names as Husaini Khānam. The distinctive features of the race are middle size rather inclined to stoutness, light skins, hooked noses, and clear features; some have blue or gray eyes, and most have a humorous and intelligent expression. Their fashion of wearing the hair and beard varies. They have no great name for temperance but are hardworking and liberal. Some of them are traders and the rest are in Government service. As a class they are well-to-do. They are mostly Shiāhs in religion, and have a name for carefully keeping the rules of their faith. As they form a distinct community, with their own places of worship and as they generally marry among themselves, the Persian Mughals have adopted fewer Hindu customs than most Gujarāt Musalmāns.

The second or Indian Mughals are found thinly scattered over every part of the province. Like the Persian Mughals, the men always place the title Mirza before their names and add Beg, and the women add Khānam to their names. They are the descendants of the Mughal conquerors of India. Many north and south Gujarāt Mughal families retain pedigrees and traditions tracing descent from the Mirzas or Timurian princes to whom Bahādur Shāh (A.D. 1526-1536) accorded an asylum first in Ahmedābād and later in Broach and Surat when they were obliged to leave Kābul and Kandahār and fly south from Humāyūn's vengeance. The shelter thus afforded by Bahādur Shāh (A.D. 1532) to Muhammad Zamān Mirza was the original ground of the quarrel that led to Humāyūn's invasion of Gujarāt in A.D. 1535.²

well-formed, tall and hairy. They are given to opium. They are generally cultivators and landholders, but some have entered the service of the native states of Pālanpūr and Baroda as savdars troopers and policemen. They intermarry with the Khokhars, Gakhars and other foreign Pathāns of Pattan.

¹ The term chughadda is derived from Chaghtāikhān the son of Changizkhān (A.D. 1218). The Tartar-Turkish dialect which his followers spoke and in which Bāber's Memoirs are written is called Chaghatai or Jaghatai. Erskine's Bāber, page 1.

² The Mirat-i-Sikandari, Persian Text, 255.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

FOREIGN MUSALMĀNS.
REGULAR CLASSES.
Shaikhs.

Mughals.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
REGULAR CLASSES.
Mughals.

After his conquest of the country Humáyún left Mughal governors in Gujarát, who, after Sher Khán Súr's successful revolt against Humáyún, were expelled from their charges by the Gujarátis (A.D. 1536).¹ The second group of Mirzas were sons of Sultán Hussein of Khurásán, who, owing to consanguinity, were entertained at the Mughal court by Báber (A.D. 1526 - 1530) and after him by Humáyún (A.D. 1531 - 1566). In A.D. 1571 they quarrelled with Jaláluddín Akbar, and entering Gujarát were received with open arms by Changízkhán who happened at that time to be in need of powerful partisans to crush the power of Ítimád Khán (A.D. 1554). After Changíz's assassination by the Kabashis (A.D. 1568) the Mirz is moved south and took possession of Broach Baroda and Chámpáner, while some of them settled at Surat.²

Except that they are fairer in complexion Mughals do not differ in appearance from ordinary Musalmáns.³ As a class they are poor, most of them earning their living as Government servants, messengers, and police. In religion they are Sunnis, differing in no way from the great body of the Sunni Musalmán population.

Pathá'ns.

Pathá'ns, 40,521, are found in all parts of the province. They are of Afghan origin and their name probably means Highlanders.⁴ The men

¹ Colonel Watson's Gujarát History, 49, 50.

² Colonel Watson's Gujarát History, 59.

³ Opinions differ as to how far Mughal is the same as Mongol. Sir George Campbell (J. A. S. B. XXXV. II. 99, 100) says: "There is no ethnological trace of Mongol migration into India. Even the leaders had changed their blood in passing through the Persian and Afghan people. On the other hand Mr. Beames (Races of the N.-W. Provinces, I. 131) says: "As their name implies, Mughals are the descendants of the companions or followers of the Tartar conquerors of India. They are less numerous than the other classes and in many cases preserve a markedly Turanian type of countenance. The following extract from a Musalmán writer of the end of the thirteenth century (A.D. 1330) supports Mr. Beames' view: 'Their faces set on their bodies as if they had no neck; their eyes narrow and piercing, their noses stretching from cheek to cheek, and their mouths from cheekbone to cheekbone, their cheeks like soft leathern bottles full of wrinkles and knots, their mustaches very long, their beards scanty.' Amir Khusró's (A.D. 1323 - 1326) Kirán-us-Saidain in Elliot's History, III. 528-529.

⁴ Captain, afterwards Sir Richard, Burton derives Pathán from the Arabic pathán victorious. Others trace the word to the Hindustáni pathna, to penetrate. Parisitah (I. 29, Persian Text) says that though the origin of the name is not certain, yet he thinks that the first Afgháns who came to India settled at Patna and were hence called Patháns. These are all late Muslim explanations. Afghan tradition derives the name from the title Patán or Patán ("leader") given by the Prophet himself to their great ancestor Abdur-Rashíd. It is however now generally agreed that the name Pathán is the Indian form of the name Pashlán (plural Pashláns) now given to themselves by speakers of the Pashlu or Pakhtu language. They inhabit the koh or hilly country from Swát and Bajaur in the north to Sini and Dinkar in the south and from Iláshán Abdál in the east to Kábul and Kandahár in the west. They are not by any means a pure race, but include Tartar (Ghilzai), Arab (Durrání) and Indian (Páshá) elements, as well as a probably Iranian element, the original speakers of the Pashlu language. Darmsteter has shown (Chants Populaires des Afgháns, introd. pages clxxxvii) that the modern name Pashlán goes back to an earlier form Pashlán, which is derived from the ancient Iranian word Parahli "a hill". These original Patháns are to be identified with the parres of Herodotus (IV. 41) as well as with the paroparav of Ptolemy (ch. xviii). The name Afghán does not seem to occur before Varáha-Mihira (A.D. 550) who mentions the race under the name Avaggha (Driah Saúlita, ch. xiv). Further discussion of the subject will be found in Baller's Races of Afghanistan and in the work by Darmsteter already quoted. A. M. T. Jackson, I.C.S.

add Khán to their names and the women Khátun or Kháú. They came to Gujarát chiefly as soldiers and merchants, and are of two classes old settlers and countrymen wiláitis that is newcomers from Afghanistan. The descendants of old Pathán settlers, like the representatives of other foreign Musalmáns, have in most cases by intermixture with other classes lost their peculiarities of feature and character. The new settlers are tall and large-boned, broad-chested, and well-limbed. Though most of them have lost their original Afghan fairness, the skin being of all shades from a ruddy olive to a decided black, their features are strongly marked, many of them with hooked noses, their eyes blue gray and brown, and their hair long and flowing in most cases of a brown shade. They are less shrewd than the Shaikhs, but more thrifty, headstrong, and hot-tempered with a bad name for greed as the saying likens a merciless creditor to a Pathán (Pathán kí karz). The Urdu proverb says 'There is no trust in a Pathán's word.' Except a few merchants and horse-dealers most Patháns are soldiers. All are Sunnis in religion. The unlettered among them carry their religious fervour to fanaticism. But, except the newcomers wiláitis, as a class they pay little attention to religious duties. Many send their children to schools and universities. Some have acquired a knowledge of English and are in the service of Government and of the railways as clerks guards and stationmasters: others have risen high in native states.

Besides the four main classes, Sayáds Shaikhs Mughals and Patháns, the names of seventeen small communities show that they are partly of foreign descent. Of these three Sidís, Wáhhábís, and Híjdás come under religion; two, Kábulis and Náitáís, under trade; nine, Agarís, Baltiáís, Bhutáís, Changís, Kasbátís, Khátiáís, Khiljís, Kuráishis, and Kirdiáís, under land; and four, Arabs, Balúchís, Makwánds, and Miráhiáís, under service.¹

Sí'dí's, literally Masters, also called Abyssinians Habashis, are found in small numbers in all parts of Gujarát. They are African negroes of different tribes chiefly from the Somali coast, who have been brought to India as slaves. They form two classes, newcomers wiláitis and countryborns muwalláds. They speak a broken Hindustáni and sometimes among themselves an African dialect, probably the Somali known as Habashi or Abyssinian.² They generally live like other low class Musalmáns. In north Gujarát they sometimes build round hovels about ten feet in circumference, the wall of earth, the roof circular and of grass. The dress both of men and women is that of lower class Musalmáns. They live by house service and begging. Those who are servants are sober and cleanly. Other Sidís as a class are fond of intoxicating drugs, quarrelsome, dirty, unthrifty, and pleasure-loving. That obstinacy is a leading trait is shown by the proverb: Habshi kí málh Abyssinian

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
FOREIGN
MUSALMÁNS.
REGULAR CLASSES.
Patháns.

SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.

Sí'dí's.

¹ Four classes Bohorís, Chundaligirís, Khojálís, and Tálís, though perhaps with a faint strain of foreign blood, find their proper place among local communities. Two others, Multáni Mochis and Nágorís, are not entered among foreign classes, as they are of Hindu origin and were probably converted to Islam in Gujarát.

² This dialect is not Abyssinian but Somali.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.
Sīdīs.

grip. Ḥabshi kā bāl bānka As crooked as an Abyssinian's hair is another saying. Except professional players, Sīdīs are the only Gujarāt Musalmāns who are much given to dancing and singing. As a class they are poor. They are Sunnis in faith but are not religious, few of them knowing the Kurān or being careful to say their prayers. Their chief object of worship is Bāba Ghor, an Abyssinian saint and great merchant, whose tomb stands on a hill just above the Ratanpur¹ carnelian mines in western Rājpipla. A point worthy of notice about the Sīdī is his talent for imitation. A band of young Sīdīs taken from a slave ship and brought to Surat have shown themselves equally ready to pick up the ways of their Christian Musalmān Hindu or Pārsi masters.

On marriage and other high days men and women together dance and sing in circles to the sound of the drum dhol and a rough rattle ḡhunḡhuna.² In begging they go about in bands of ten to fifteen, playing the drum and singing in praise of Bāba Ghor. They marry chiefly among themselves, but the countryborn Sīdīs, looking on the newcomers as their betters and fearing that their daughters will not rest contented in a countryborn Sīdī's house, never ask them in marriage. They form a society jamāat, but have no headman and but few rules. They do not teach their children either Gujarātī or English, and of late none have risen above the position of beggars and servants. Still Indian history is not wanting in instances of Sīdīs raising themselves to position and power. The favourite equery of Sultānah Razīnā (A.D. 1239), for whom the Sultānah lost her crown, was a Sīdī. Malik Ambar of Ahmednagar whose successful arms won from the Mughals the epithet 'The Hateful' was a Sīdī. So was Jhujhār Khān the Gujarāt noble who slew Changiz Khān (A.D. 1568) the powerful leader who had nearly usurped the sultānate of Gujarāt, and who was in turn slain by Akbar on his conquest of Gujarāt in A.D. 1573-74. The Sīdīs have given rulers to Zanjīrah and Sachin, and, as late as A.D. 1820, Sīdī Ismāīl, a native of Cambay, was long powerful in north Gujarāt as minister to the Bābis of Rādhanpur. The Sīdī eunuch nobles of Delhi and Lakhnau up to as late as the 1857 mutinies are well known.

¹ Wahha'bis.

Wahha'bis,³ Dissenters, now officially known as Gheir mukallid, non-imitators or Ahle hadīth, people of the tradition, though they do not ¹ There would seem at one time to have been a considerable colony of Sīdī miners at Ratanpur. Trans. Bom. Geog. Soc. II. 76.

² Their fiddle made of a gourd with a stiff catgut string is surmounted at the end with a bunch of peacock feathers and ornamented with odd glass beads and shells as charms to prevent the evil eye from harsing it. It is played with a bow or stick, one end of it laden with a coconut shell in which stones rattle. The Sīdīs hold their musical instruments in great veneration never touching them unless they are ceremonially pure. They call the ḡhunḡhuna or rattle the instrument of Māma or Mother Misrah, and their big drum that of a lea liug mālō saint. If he is careless in touching the instruments when sexually impure Mother Misrah or Father Ghor is sure to punish the offender.

³ The Wahhābī reform or schism dates from A.D. 1691 (H. 1120) the birth of Abdu-Wahhāb, the son of a petty chief of the pastoral tribe of Tamīm in Nejd and of the clan called Abdu-Wahhāb in the Li Arjd province of Arabia. Preaching with keen insight courage and eloquence against the mummeries of Turkish pilgrims yet form a separate class, have made considerable progress in Gujarát. The chief points of belief in which Wahhábis differ from Sunnis is their denial of the ability of the Prophet to intercede for his people with Alláh and their rejection of the four Sunni Imáms. The sect was brought into India in A.D. 1821, and rose to importance from the part its leaders played in the 1857 mutinies. After the mutiny was suppressed, Maulawi Liákát Ali, the chief lieutenant of the man known as the Maulawi, who had taken an important part in some of the disturbances, found his way to Gujarát, and, under a false name, moved about the province as a Wahhábi missionary. He met with much favour and was making many converts, when he was discovered and arrested at Sachín, and, for his share in the mutinies, was transported for life. After Liákát Ali's arrest the progress of the Wahhábi sect in Gujarát was crippled. Of late (A.D. 1875 - 1897) there has been a revival. Several preachers, each with a follower or two, have come to Gujarát, chiefly from Central India, and have spread their special beliefs with marked success. Their converts have been almost entirely from the Sunni Bohorás, both the trading Bohorás of north and south Gujarát and the peasant Bohorás of the south. The latter, always a religious class, have received Wahhábi teaching with readiness, and, under the influence of the preachers, have made marked changes in their religious and social practices.¹

Ka'bulis, the chief of the two part-foreign trading communities, are found in all parts of the province, but chiefly in Ahmedábád. They are Afghán settlers from Kábul.² New arrivals speak Pashtu. But as they generally marry Afghán women brought up in Gujarát,

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.
Wahhábis.

Ka'bulis.

and the abuses that had crept into the Muslimán religion, Abdul-Wahhábi was driven out of his native place. With the aid of his friend the chief of Deraiah, he determined to spread his reforms at the edge of the sword, and after a life of peril and success died at Deraiah in A.D. 1787. Abdul-Wahhábi's work was with vigour pushed on by his son Muhammad; and Muhammad's son Abdul Aziz collecting an army greatly spread the power of the Wahhábis. By the close of the century they were acknowledged by the head of the Makkah government as a separate nation, and allowed to perform their pilgrimages to the Ka'ba. Meanwhile the growth of their power and their hostile spirit had alarmed the Porte, and in A.D. 1797 an expedition was sent against them. This expedition was ill planned and badly carried out, and proved a failure. A peace was concluded for six years. But before the six years were over, Snúd, the son of Abdul Aziz, attacked and captured the town of Karbalain 1801; the shrine of Abbás, the uncle of the Prophet, at Táif in 1802; and the temple of Makkah in 1803. Horrortruck with this last act of sacrilege the Muslimán powers joined to put down the Wahhábis, and except for a few successes, the rest of Snúd's life was passed as a hunted outlaw. In A.D. 1812 Muhammad Ali, Pashá of Egypt, by the help of the English defeated Snúd's son Abdulláh, who was taken to Constantinople, and in A.D. 1818 suffered death as a hero and rebel. Though crippled by their defeat, the Wahhábis gradually recovered, and are now a separate nation with their seat of government at Riád in Arabia. The Wahhábis are the strictest sect of Islám. They denounce all belief in saints, and to some extent in Muslimán traditions, all ceremonies and forms, and all luxury, and enforce the duty of waging religious war against infidels. Among the leaders of the sect it is said to be a disputed point whether this last part of their duty is binding on Indian Wahhábis.

¹ See below pages 29 - 32.

² According to Major H. W. Deller (Journal, II. 46 - 52) the word Afghán has the same meaning as Pakhtún that is The Free. The punning Afghán tradition regarding the origin of the term Afghán is that the mother of the great ancestor of the Afgháns gave him the name Afghána because on passing through the pangs of delivery she joyfully exclaimed Afghána I am free.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.
Kābulis.

they soon learn to talk Hindustāni, though ungrammatically and with a marked accent. They are a tall muscular well-made race. In complexion the newcomers are fair, the others of a ruddy olive. The eyes are blue or gray or brown, the nose is generally hooked, the hair is left to hang loose in ringlets, and the beard is allowed to grow to great length. A Kābuli wears a country scarf dupatta wound round the head, a loose shirt of white cloth, a second scarf thrown round the shoulders, a pair of striped or white cotton trousers very loose above and gathered at the instep, and native shoes. The men wear no ornaments but a silver ring. Except that the trousers are somewhat looser, the women's dress and ornaments do not differ from those worn by other Musalmān women. They are passionate but sober and hardworking and as creditors proverbially exacting. The Persian proverb noticed in the Ain-i-Akbari by Abul Fazl,¹ does not give the Afghān a high name for his social virtues.

*Agar quah-ur rijāl uftād azin seh vns lam giri.
Yekt Afghān, duyum Kambū, sayum bad zāt Kashmiri.
Though men are scarce deal not with the following three,
The Afghān, the Kambū, and the bad Kashmiri.*

The Kambūs are an offshoot of the Afghān stock. M. Blochman says that, in spite of the above couplet, during the reigns of Akbar (A.D. 1556-1605) and Jahāngir (A.D. 1605-1627) it was a distinction to belong to the Kambū and Afghān tribes.² Most of them are traders, dealing in horses, sheep from Mārwar, books, and fruit. Horse-dealing is their chief employment, taking Kāthiāwād horses to Sindh and the Dakhan and bringing Dakhan and Sindh horses to Gujarāt. Their chief markets are in the native states, especially in Baroda and Rājpipla. Their trade is said at present to be unprofitable and many are in debt. They are Sunnis in religion. To a great extent they form a distinct community, marrying only among themselves and asking only Kābulis to their public dinners. They have one or two families whom they respect and to whom they refer social disputes. Few of them teach their children to read or write.

Na'iatas.

Na'iatas, originally Nawāits, Shipmen,³ in former times an important class of Musalmān merchants and ship captains, have ¹ Blochman's Translation of the Ain-i-Akbari, 339.

² Blochman's Translation of the Ain-i-Akbari, 339.

³ On the coast of Kinara and the Konkan, where they are still found, they are called Nawāits. Khān Bahādur Kāfi Shāhāb-ud-din. Ibn-i-Batūta (A.D. 1342) mentions meeting Nawāits at Mondar. Lee's Translation, 167. So in A.D. 1442 the Muhammadans of Kāblant were of the Shāfi school and dressed like Arabs. Major's India in the Fifteenth Century, I. 11, 17. Grant Duff refers (A.D. 1711) to this same class under the name Nawāitah Nabobs, 262-63. The Nawāits (plural Nawāit) are a people of the Kureish tribe who emigrated from the holy city of Madīnah flying from the persecution of Al Hajjāj (A.D. 700) the son of Eufāt, the strongminded governor of Irak on behalf of Abdul Malik, the fifth Umayyad (A.D. 681-707) who killed fifty thousand Sayads and learned men unjustly and in cold blood. The Nawāits marched from Madīnah to Kāfah, where taking ship they reached the shores of the Indian Ocean about A.D. 685 (A.H. 232) that is during the reign of the Abbāsī El Mubāttal. The emigrants belonged to four

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
FOREIGN
MUSALMÁNS.
SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.
Arabs.

nose, high cheekbones, slightly receding chin, and scanty uneven beard. But in a generation or two by intermarriage with Gujarát Musalmáns these special features disappear. In the shape and style of his house there is nothing peculiar. But in furnishing it the Arab is careful to have the cloth ceiling inlaid with small plates of burnished tale; to have no pictures except perhaps a drawing of the Prophet's shrine or an illuminated scroll from the Kuraán; and instead of brittle china and glass, generally to have his shelves filled with a trim and bright array of copper and brass plates and bowls. Except for one or two special holiday dishes of mutton and wheat called karitka and muzbi and a fondness for the dates and honey of the country, the food of the Arab does not differ from that of other Musalmáns. The rich among them keep to the Arab dress, a turban much like the Indian headscarf dupatta of white silk and cotton wound round the head in broad folds; a long embroidered or plain overcoat sháyah of wool or silk-cotton, much like an English dressing gown; a woollen silk-embroidered waistcoat sadria; a shirt hanging to the knees; and a waistcloth survāl wrapped round the loins and falling to the ankles. Except that like the Maráthi headdress the turban is three-cornered in the case of Arabs holding service in native states, that the dirk jambia is stuck in a cloth wound round the waist, and that the trousers are shorter, the every-day dress of poor Arabs does not differ from that of other Gujarát Musalmáns. The dress of the women and children has no peculiarities. Hot tempered, and when excited fierce, the Arab is at other times quiet hardworking thrifty and sober. Some Arabs are traders, but most are in the service either of chiefs as their bodyguard or of bankers as watchmen. As a class they are poor. Some thrifty families taking no part in the Indian custom of giving costly feasts are well-to-do. But most, adopting the ways of the country, give entertainments they can ill afford, and of those employed at native courts the greater number are irregularly paid and sunk in debt. In religion the newcomers from the southern and western provinces of Arabia are generally of the Sháfi school, and those from Maskat and the eastern seaboard of the Hambali school. All newcomers are marked by zeal for their faith. But Arab families long settled in Gujarát differ from ordinary Sunni Musalmáns only in being more careful and hearty in discharging their religious duties. Their family observances are in most cases peculiar. Considering them immodest they have no observances in honour of pregnancy birth or puberty, and crowd into one the ceremonies on the seventh fifteenth and twenty-first days after birth and the three rites of naming, sacrifice, and circumcision. The personal names are simple, without the Indian addition of Mia, Sháikh, or Dhúii. As a rule no initiation hismilláh ceremony is observed, and marriage is generally in the nikáh form, and is marked by only one dinner, which they call walimah, following the example of the Prophet who gave a dinner at the marriage of his daughter the Lady Fátimah and Ali. In obedience to the order of the Prophet a death is followed by no signs of mourning. Arabs marry freely with other Sunni Musalmáns and have no special social or religious organization.¹ Most of their children learn the Kurañ, but hardly any are taught to read and write an Indian language. As a class they do not approve of western education.

Balu'chi's, found in all parts of Gujarát, are as their name shows descended from Balúchi immigrants. According to his own account the Balúchi is an immigrant from Halab or Aleppo and north Syria. As a Musalmán he is anxious to derive his ancestry from the Arabs of Al Hijáz. His language however is clearly of the Indo-Persic stock and his appearance bears little resemblance to that of the sons of Ismáíl. He has the full black expressive Persian eye, the regular sharp-cut Iránian features, and the long lustrous thick and flowing beard.² In the reign of Ahmed II. during the decadence of the Sultánate of Gujarát (A.D. 1554-1561) Rádhanpur and Sami were given to Fateh Khán Balúch as jágir or grant. The Terwárn and Rádhanpur Balúchis claim descent from the same stock as Fateh Khán Balúch. They are of many clans. But the clan distinction is of little consequence as they intermarry and together form one subdivision of the Patháns. They are strong big dark men with marked features. Very few shave the head, but they follow no fixed rule about wearing the beard. Their wives are generally natives of Gujarát, sometimes Jháká or Jádeja Rajpúts from Káthiáwáda or Wágad. They speak Hindustáni much mixed with Gujaráti, and both men and women dress like ordinary Musalmáns. They are messengers and village watchmen. According to their customs they are double-dealing and treacherous, unruly, thriftless, and given to opium. On the other hand they possess all the nomadic virtues, being hospitable simple strong in their affections trusty and brave. Their fidelity and devotion to their employers has given the Balúchis the title of the Switzers of the East. As a class except certain landholding families of north Gujarát they are poor. They are Sunnis in name, but few know the Kurañ or care for their religion. They have no peculiar customs, and are without either a union or a headman. They do not send their children to school. The landholding Balúchis have begun (A.D. 1889) to send their children to school under pressure of the Political officers. The Játh Balúchis of north Gujarát who own the strip of land from Váráhi in the Pálanpur Superintendency to Bajána in the Káthiáwáda Agency do not marry except among the Rajpúts and themselves. They are a fair and handsome race, brave and of predatory habits, whose home tongue is Gujaráti. They believe in the saint who is enshrined at Gotarka and whom they called Dádá Mahábali whose shrine, about eight miles west of Rádhanpur, they have richly endowed with lands and money. This saint Mahábali is said originally to have been a Pattan Shaikh who in a dream was given a black turban by Jamman Jati, the Hindu-Musalmán saint of northern India. Mahábali was directed by Jamman Jati to proceed to Váráhi

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

FOREIGN MUSALMÁNS.

SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.
Balu'chis.

¹ Some of the newcomers keep up the memory of old tribal feuds and have no intercourse with people belonging to a rival clan. After a generation or two in India interest in the old feuds fades.

² Burton's Sindh Revisited, II. 168.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

FOREIGN
MUSALMANS.
SPECIAL
COMMUNITIES.

and reclaim those Balúchis who were fast relapsing into Hindu modes of belief and customs. The Játh Balúchis of Váráhi and Jatwár are a distinct race from the Balúchis of Terwára about fifteen miles north of Radhanpur, though in dress and customs they do not differ from one another. The original religion of the Balúchi is Shiáhism and the Játh Balúchis of north Gujarát and other Balúch families scattered over Gujarát are only Sunnis in name. Colebrook observes regarding this clan: The Balúchis of Sindh are many of them devoted Shiáhs and call themselves and are sometimes called by the Sunnis 'Ali's friends,'¹ Sayad Rájo of Bulkhára exerted himself in the guidance of this tribe. His descendants remain among them.

Makra'nis.

Makra'nis, found in small numbers over the whole province, are foreigners from the Makrán coast. They formerly came and a few still come as soldiers. They have no subdivisions. They are of average height, strong wiry and thin, wearing the hair very long tied in a knot at the top of the head, and parting the beard tying the ends behind the head. The women are chiefly of Gujaráti descent. They speak mixed Hindustáni and Gujaráti. The men wear a low tight-twisted Márvádi-like turban, a dark-blue indigo-dyed coat, and short tight trousers. The women wear the Musalmán dress. The men are soldiers and watchmen; the women do house-work and spin. The men are brave, given to opium and liquor, fond of amusement, and very watchful husbands. The women do not appear in public. They are poor, many of them in debt. In religion they are Sunnis some of them learning the Kuraán and saying their prayers. They have no peculiar customs. They marry Musalmán women of the poorer class, and some keep Hindu women. They have no community or headman. They do not send their children to school and none have risen to any high position.

Mirdha's.

Mirdha's,² originally spies, found in the north in very small numbers, are said to be of part-foreign part-Rajpút origin. Under the Gujarát Sultáns they served as spies and are now employed as messengers and constables. Under native rule the Mirdha was an official spy. Now a Mirdha can be either a Musalmáni Shaikh, a Pathán, or a Bráhmanic Hindu. The office exists in name in the Pálanpur Superintendency, where the Mirdhás are Bráhman of the Audich division.

Section II.—Hindu Converts.

HINDU
CONVERTS.

The local Musalmáns, of almost entirely Hindu descent, are divided into seventy-eight communities or classes. Of these nine come under Religion; five under Trade; eighteen under Land; twenty-two under Crafts; ten under Service; and fourteen under Labour. Of the whole number sixty-five are Sunnis, nine Shiáhs, and four, Husainí Bráhman, Kamáliás, Matia Kunbis, and Shaikhddás cannot be said to belong to either sect.

¹ Dabistání-Mazálib of Nuhshá Fání in Asiatic Researches, VII. 344.

² Mirdha is apparently derived from the Persian Mir, lord master or chief and deh village. Mir Deh master of the village or as commonly known village headman.

I.—Religious Communities.

Under Religion come the different tribes or brotherhoods of religious beggars fakirs. Almost all of these begging communities lead a roving life, and include in their ranks men from all parts of India and of every variety of descent. But these are the exceptions. The greater number of beggars of every class are of Gujarāt origin and seldom leave the province.

Of begging communities the first is a nameless horde; in Surat, chiefly low Momna weavers; in Ahmedābād, low Momnās, Dheds, Vāghris, and Marvādīs, who by night and day move from house to house gathering money grain and cooked food. The money they keep and the grain and broken food they sell to potters as provender for their asses, and to washormen to feed their bullocks. Others reciting praises of the generous and abuse of the stingy, ask for a copper in the name of God; a piece of bread in the name of the Prophet; or a rag of cloth in the name of Hasan, all to be repaid tenfold in this world and a hundredfold at the day of judgment.

Besides these non-descript idlers there are eleven brotherhoods of beggars belonging to two main classes, those beyond the ordinary Muhammadan law Besharāa, and those under the law Bāsharāa. Those beyond the law have no wives no families and no homes. They drink intoxicating liquors and neither fast pray nor rule their passions.¹ Those under the law have wives and homes and pray fast and keep all Muhammadan rules.

Each brotherhood has generally three office-bearers. Of these one is superior, the head teacher sar-guroh, who controls the whole body and receives a share of all earnings, and two are subordinate, the summoner izni or nakīb, who calls the members to all entrance marriage and death feasts, and the treasurer blandāri, who sees that pipes and water are ready at the beggars' meeting-place. Among the members are two orders, the teachers murshids, and the disciples khādims or chelds. Every newcomer joins as the disciple of some particular teacher. The teacher sees that the entrance ceremony is properly performed; that the disciple is shaved and bathed; that he learns the names of the heads of the order; that he promises to reverence them; that he receives certain articles of dress; that he gets a new name; that he learns the new salutation; that he swears not to steal, not to lie, not to commit adultery, to work hard as a beggar or in any other calling, and to eat things lawful; and finally, that the entrance feast is duly given. At the close of each day the newcomer lays his earnings before the head teacher sar-guroh. Taking out something for himself and a share to meet the treasurer's charges, the head teacher gives back the rest. This the beggar takes to his teacher, who giving him a little as pocket money, keeps the rest for himself. So long as his teacher lives a beggar continues to be his disciple. When a teacher

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.HINDU
CONVERTS.
BEGGARS.

¹ Though many of them do not know what the term means, most besharāa beggars profess to be sāfis or spiritual unitarians. Khān Bahādūr Kāzi Sahib Shahāb-ud-dīn.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVENTS.
BEGGARS.

dies the oldest disciple succeeds, or if the teacher has a son, the son and the senior disciple share the other disciples between them.

Of the ten brotherhoods, two, the Abdalis and the Nakshbands, belong to the lawful bāsharaa group, and eight, the Benawās, the Hījdās, the Husaini Brāhmans, the Kalandars, the Madāris, the Māsa Suhāgs, the Rafāfīs, and the Rasūlshāhis to the lawless besharaa group.

Abda'lis.

Of the communities of lawful beggars, the Abdā'lis, also called Dafālis or Fadālis, players on the tambourine daf, are found in small numbers all over Gujarāt. They speak Hindustāni, and beg in the name of God, beating the one-end drum ḍanka, and singing religious songs. Their chief employment is to chant the wild spirit and genii hymns that are required by exorcists as an accompaniment to the practice of their rites. Belonging to the lawful bāsharaa order, they are married and a few of them are settled and well-to-do. They are not very religious and have little organisation. In north Gujarāt Abdālis have a fixed due or tax upon the houses of Musalmāns in towns and villages. It is sometimes paid in kind and sometimes in money and varies from annas 8 to Rs. 2.

Nakshbands.

Nakshbands, Mark-makers, are found in small numbers over the whole of Gujarāt. Followers of a saint named Khājah Babā-ud-dīn Nakshband, they speak Hindustāni, keep the head bare, and wear the hair and beard long and well-combed. They dress in a long sleeveless unsewn shirt, a black or red cotton waistcloth, and shoes. Holding in their hand a stout-wicked flaming unshaded brass lamp, which neither rain nor wind can put out, they move about singly chanting their saint's praises. The Nakshband reverence for fire is said to be a trace of the attempted revival of Magian element worship in Persia and Tartary about A.D. 946 (i. 333) the period of Shi'ah ascendancy at the court of the Khalīfahs of Baghdad during the supremacy of the Persian house of Buwaih or the Bowides. Children are fond of the Nakshband, and go out in numbers to give him money. In return as his name shows, he marks them on the brow with oil from his lamp. They are quiet well-behaved and sober, belonging to the law-abiding bāsharaa order of beggars, having homes and families. They are Sunnis in religion and have no special customs, and as they live only in ones and twos they have little organisation. They easily find disciples and are fairly prosperous.

Benawa's.

Of the seven lawless besharaa classes, Benawa's, The Penniless, also called Alifshāhis from wearing a black 'Alif-like line down the brow and nose, are found in small numbers all over Gujarāt. They are drawn from many classes of Muhammadans, and have nothing special in their appearance. Their language is Hindustāni. They wear a tall Persian-like woollen hat, a rough sleeveless unsewn shirt, and round the neck long rosaries of beads salis. They neither play nor perform, but move about in bands of from five to ten begging in the name of God. They take money grain and clothes, or, if offered it, a meal of food. Though not sober they are quiet and harmless. They are Sunnis in name but belong to the order of lawless vesharaa beggars. They have no peculiar customs, and follow the rules of fellowship usually kept among the larger bodies of beggars. In each town they have a headman called treasurer, bhandári, chosen from among their number. To him each of the community pays his earnings, and except what is given back for expenses, the treasurer forwards the amount to the murshid or spiritual head of the order. Out of the funds in the murshid's hands, when a new member joins a dinner is given. Of late years their number has fallen.

¹ Alif the first letter of the Arab alphabet, in shape a straight line, is worn as a mark of the One God.

Hijda's are emasculated male votaries of the goddess Bahuchara or Behehra, a sister of Káli. They have taken the vow to sacrifice their manliness, and not only emasculate themselves but ever after go in woman's dress. With this object they pull out the hair of their beards and moustaches, bore the ear and nose for female ornaments, and affect female speech and manners. The vows are taken by mothers in consequence of their barrenness, or, in rare cases, by the boy himself on recovery from a dangerous illness. The south Gujarát Hijda's wear the petticoat and scarf; those north of the Narbada dress like Musalmán women. They feign themselves women and some of them devote their lives to the practice of sodomy and gain their living by it. The initiation takes place at the temple of the goddess Behehra, about sixty miles north-east of Ahmedábád in the village of Sankhanpúr, where the neophyte repairs under the guardianship or adoption of some older member of the brotherhood. The lad is called the daughter of the old Hijda his guardian. The emasculation takes place under the direction of the chief Hijda priest of Behehra. The rites are secret. It is said that the operation and initiation are held in a house with closed doors where all the Hijda's meet in holiday dress. The fire-place is cleaned and the fire is lighted to cook a special dish of fried pastry called talav. While the oil in which the pastry is to be fried is boiling some of the fraternity, after having bathed the neophyte, dress him in red female attire, deck him with flower garlands, and seating him on a stool in the middle of the room sing, to the accompaniment of a dhol or small drum and small copper cymbals. Others prepare the operating room. In the centre of this room soft ashes are spread on the floor and piled in a heap. When the time for the operation approaches the neophyte is led to the room and is made to lie on his back on the ash heap. The operator approaches chewing betel-leaf. The hands and legs of the neophyte are firmly held by some one of the fraternity, and the operator carelessly standing near with an unconcerned air, when he finds the attention of his patient otherwise occupied, with great dexterity and with one stroke cuts off both penis and testes. He spits betelnut and leaf juice on the wound and staunches the bleeding with a handful of babul Acacia arabica ashes. The operation is dangerous and is not uncommonly fatal. Some north Gujarát Hijda's, though they hold themselves devotees of Behehra, neither suffer emasculation nor wear women's dress. They only affect the mincing talk and manners of lewd women. They marry and beget children and are Hijda's only in name. They also perform plays at the birth of sons among the poorer

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
BEGGARS.

Hijda's.

Chapter II.Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
BEGGARS.

Musalmán. Híjdás of the play-acting class are to be found in and about Ahmedábád. As a class Gujarát Híjdás enjoying independent means of livelihood have not to engage in sodomy to any active extent. As votaries of Beheehra they hold fields and lands and rights on lands awarded them from of old by native chiefs, village communities, and private persons. They have rights on communities also, receiving yearly payments from them. Woe betide the wight who opposes the demands of a Híjda. The whole rank and file of the local fraternity besiege his house with indecent clamour and gesture.

Husaini
Bra'hmans.

Husaini Bra'hmans call themselves followers of the Atharva Veda. They take their title from Husain, the grandson of the Prophet, in whose name they ask alms. They are not converts to Islám, but adopt such of its doctrines as are not contrary to the Hindu faith. Their head-quarters are at Ajmir, and they are found in Baroda and Ahmedábád. Their high priest has always a natural stain or red mark round his neck, and when he dies search is made, and the post is given to some one who has the proper sign.¹ The Gujarát head-quarters of the high priest are at Baroda and from there he visits the members of the brotherhood, receiving from them presents and contributions. According to their own account, the Husaini Bráhmans of Ahmedábád have been settled there for the last seven generations. Their homelanguage is Hindustáni. They are of the lawless besharaa group of beggars. Except beef they eat secretly the ordinary kinds of animal food. They take opium and bhang hemp-leaves, but do not drink wine. Beside by begging they earn a living by practising astrology and palmistry. They are believed to have great skill in reading the stars, and many among them are well-to-do. The men dress like Musalmáns the women like Hindus. They believe in the saint Khájah Muin-ud-dín Chishti of Ajmir, and consult both Muhammadan and Hindu omens. Except that they wear the Hindu browmark tila, that they often give their children Hindu names, that they do not circumcise, that a priest of their own class marries them, and that their dead are buried sitting, their customs, even to observing the Ramazán fast, are Muhammadan.

Kalandars.

Kalandars,² Monks, are found in small numbers all over Gujarát. They speak Hindustáni and dress like poor Musalmáns. They wander over the country begging and are very sturdy and troublesome in their demands. They are Sunnis of the lawless besharaa order. They shave the whole body, the shearing of the eyebrows being one of the most important initiatory rites.

Mada'ris.

Mada'ris take their name from Badí-ud-dín Madár Sháh, the celibate saint of Syria, supposed to be still alive in his tomb at Makanpur near Cawnpore.³ They are found in small numbers all over Gujarát. They speak Hindustáni and dress like poor Musalmáns.

¹ This mark, of which only one or two in a generation can boast, is a narrow necklace of small rose-coloured warts in some places bright in other places faint. To all appearance the mark is natural.

² An Arabic word meaning monk.

³ Kánu-i-Íslám, 241.

Some, to force people to give them alms, go about dragging a chain or lashing their legs with a whip. Others are monkey and bear trainers and rope-dancers. They are quarrelsome and obstinate and of loose habits. They belong to the lawless besharaa order of Sunnis and are without homes, though some have wives and children. They beg sometimes alone and sometimes in bands of two or three. They are a well-managed body and are said not to be falling in numbers.

Mu'sa Suha'gs, followers of Músa with the married woman's dress, are to be found singly all over Gujarrát. Their patron saint Músa, who lived at the close of the fifteenth century, according to one account dressed in woman's clothes as a symbol that he was devoted to God as a wife to her husband. He was a famous singer and saint whose prayer for rain saved the country from famine. According to another account, Músa was so pressed and worried by the crowd that to hide himself he used to go about dressed as a woman. Even through this disguise people found him out and at last he was so weary of life that one day stamping on the ground the earth opened and received him. In memory of their leader's disguise most of the beggars of this order, though they do not shave the beard, dress like married women in a red scarf dupattu a gown and trousers.¹ They also put on bracelets bell-anklets and other ornaments. They go singly blessing the people without music or other show. They are sober quiet and generally liked. They speak Hindustáni. They are Sunnis in religion, and never marry. Their head-quarters are at Ahmedábád, where, a short way out of the Delhi or north gate, is the saint Músa's tomb.² Being a small body they have little organisation. As the dress and the vow of celibacy are disliked, the Músa Subágs gain few disciples, and as they have no children their numbers are falling.

Rafa'is that is Exalted, also called Faceclashers Munkhphodús or Munkhchirús, occur in considerable numbers over the whole of Gujarrát. They are followers of Sayad Ahmad Kabír and speak Hindustáni. Except that they wear the dhoti waistcloth, they dress like ordinary low class Musalmáns. Holding in the right hand a twelve-inch iron spike called gurr, sharp-pointed and having near the top many small iron chains, the beggar rattles the chains, and if people are slow in giving him money strikes at his cheek or eye with the sharp iron point and seems to cause no wound. They beg in the name of

Chapter II Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
BEGGARS.

Mu'sa Suha'gs.

Rafa'is.

¹ Some dress like men except that they wear the small nosering or buddk, which is worn hanging from a hole bored in the cartilage, and as no widow can wear the buddk its use shows that the Músa Subág is the married wife of Allah.

² Near the saint's tomb is a large champa Michelia champaca tree. Its branches are covered with hundreds of glass bangles, some of great delicacy. These bangles circle the branches above the forks and in other places where it is hard to see how they could have been put. People who have made vows throw their bangles into the tree, and if the bangles stay, they think their prayer is granted. In the mosque enclosure are four tombs and there is a fifth outside of the wall. The story is that when the king saw the ground close over Músa he dug after him and the head of the saint came up somewhere else. This was done four times when the king said let us offer flowers. Hearing this the head of the saint again appeared, this time outside of the wall, and saying he wished no offerings, finally disappeared.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.

Ra'su'lsha'his.

God, and are very persistent and troublesome. Though fond of intoxicating drugs, very few of them drink liquor. They are Sunnis in religion, and, though most are of the lawless besharaa order of beggars, some are law-observing and have wives and children. Their boys follow their fathers' calling and they marry their girls to beggars. They are poor.

Rasu'lsha'his, followers of the Prophet, also called Mustāns or Madmen, are found in small numbers all over Gujarāt. They have nothing special in their appearance, and speak Hindustāni. They object to clothes and wear only a shirt and waistcloth. They carry a large wooden ohn and bag for money to pay for drink. They are very dissipated and troublesome. They are Sunnis of the lawless besharaa order, without wives or settled homes. They are a very small body with a religious head but no organised community.

II.—Trading Communities.

Of traders there are five chief classes, Bohorās, Dūd-wīlās, Kardīās, Khojās, and Memans.¹

Bohora's.

Of these the trading Bohora's, originally all Shiāhs of the Mustāli branch of the great Ismā'ili sect, are the richest and most prosperous class of Musalmāns in Gujarāt. The origin of the name Bohora is doubtful. It is generally traced to the class of Hindu Bohorās who are still found in Mār-wād, Rajpūtāna, and the North-West Provinces.² But as there is no certain record of Hindu Bohorās in Gujarāt,³ it seems better to derive the word from the Gujarāti vohoruu to trade, the occupation followed by the first Hindu converts to Islām.⁴ What makes the origin of the word more doubtful is that neither at present nor under the Musalmān rulers of Gujarāt is its use limited to traders or to converts of the special Ismā'ili form of faith. Besides the traders there is a larger and not less prosperous class of village Bohorās, tillers of the soil and Sunnis by religion. The existence of these two distinct classes is an illustration of the fact that in Gujarāt Shiāhism was spread by the persuasion of preachers and Sunniism by the power of rulers. The early Shiāh preachers (A.D. 1067), being treated ¹ Certain historical and other parts of the Bohora account are taken from papers prepared by Mr. Mirza Abdul Hसन of Rangoon.

² Nicolson's Central India, II. III; Tod's Rājasthān, II. 491, Edition 1831; Elliot's Hecce, I. 44. The Mirāt-i-Almudi (Pers. Text, II. 87) confirms the Hindu derivation of the name Bohora. It says many Brahman and Bania traders being called Bohorās retained the name after their conversion. Many Dandiā and even Nāgar Brahmins to this day bear the surname Bohora.

³ There is now (A.D. 1893) no trace of a Hindu Bohora caste in Gujarāt, and the passage in the Kumārapāla-chrītra, 'There are plenty of Bohorās in Anahilavāda and Birgong' (Vīrangām) (Tod's Western India, 119-127), was probably written about A.D. 1150 or some time after the spread of the Ismā'ili faith among the traders of north Gujarāt.

⁴ Other explanations are from Dehrinsh said to be a town in Yaman in lower Arabia, the birth-place of the great Bohora missionary Abdullāh; from bekrāh the right or good way, because as the Shiāh Bohorās say, the way of their religion is right; or from bahurāh many paths, because according to the Sunni Bohorās they were converted from many castes. Of the first there would seem to be no support; the two last the people themselves would probably admit to be puns.

with much kindness by the Hindu kings of Anahilavāḍa, settled and made converts chiefly in the great trading centres, while to the Musalmān governors it was of more political value to bring over to their religion the sturdy and outlying villager than the weak and peace-loving trader. The use of the same name to classes so unlike as the city and village Bohorās, would seem to be due to the great division of the Gujarāt population into armed dhīrvāla and unarmed. To distinguish converts from the armed Rajpūt and Koli castes the Musalmān governors coined such names as Molesalām, Malik, and Sipāhi. For converts of the trading class the word Bohora was in use, and this they extended to converts from all the unarmed castes, Brāhmans husbandmen and craftsmen.¹ 5

An account of the Sunni village or cultivating Bohorās is given below [pages 58-61]. Of trading Bohorās there are several subdivisions, one of them Sunnis and the rest Shiāhs. All can be traced to converts made in the eleventh century by Shiāh missionaries of the Ismāīlī sect. Though settled in many parts of the Bombay Presidency, and in Haidarābād in the Dakhan, in Berār, Mālwa, Central India, and Rajputāna, and, as traders found over almost the whole of India, the high priest and head-quarters of the sect are in Surat. Some of them claim to come from Egyptian-Arab and Yaman-Arab ancestors. Others acknowledge themselves to be entirely of Hindu blood, the descendants of converts to the teaching of Ismāīlīan missionaries. A certain special look and character support the statements of Musalmān historians that they are partly the descendants of refugees from Egypt and Arabia.²

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Bohora's.

¹ Compare Rās Māla (New Edition, 261): 'The Rajpūts forcibly converted by Sultan Ahmed I. (about A.D. 1420) formed a separate caste called Molesalāms; the Vāṇīs and the Brāhmans converted at the same time joined the sect of the Bohorās.' The ordinary Gujarātī use of the word Bohora very closely corresponds with Hindu converts from the unarmed classes. Thus several classes who have a special name from their craft or calling are spoken of as Bohorās, and in some cases, as in Ghānchī-Bohora, the word Bohora is added to the craft-name. So, too, the Dhāndhārī Mounds call themselves Bohorās, and the class of Konkani Musalmāns who take service with Europeans are known in Gujarāt as Konkani Bohorās. On the strength of this general meaning of Bohora, Khān Bahādūr Kāzī Shahāb-ud-dīn would derive the word Bohora from the Persian bakir, literally strings of camels, and more generally camp followers or miscellaneous classes, or from bahraj, a word meaning prudent or business-like. An objection, at least to the first of these, seems to be that the name Bohora was not given by the Musalmān governors, but dates from Shiāh conversions in the eleventh century. This is confirmed by the Mirāt-i-Ahmedī Pers. Text, II. 87. Another explanation of the use of the word Bohora both to Shiāh traders and to Sunni villagers, is that at one time all were Shiāhs of the Dādāī form of faith, and that the Sunni village Bohorās were converted to the orthodox faith by some of the early Gujarāt kings. But there is very little to support this theory, and neither the Dādāīs nor the village Sunni Bohorās have any trace or tradition of such a double conversion. Elliot (Races of the North-West Provinces, I. 44) says: Bohorās are moneylenders who came to the North-West Provinces from Jaipur, originally from Western India. Their class name is probably from beohār trade.

² Farishtah and the Mirāt-i-Ahmedī on the authority of Major J. W. Watson, 14th January 1874, and of Mr. Muoshi Iutfulkāh Khān of Surat, 15th August 1874. One account gives as early a date as A.D. 870, and another the close of the eleventh century, when the Nāẓarīn Ismāīlīs becoming supreme in Persia are supposed to have ousted their rivals the Mustafīlī Ismāīlīs. In later times A.D. 1539 the date given for the arrival of the supreme head of the sect from Aden so nearly agrees with the capture of Aden by the Turks that it seems probable that the High priest was accompanied to India by a band of refugees.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Bohora's.

According to the received account of their rise in Gujarāt, in the course of the eleventh century about A.D. 1067 (II. 460)¹ Abdullāh, a missionary dāi, sent from Haraz in Yaman by the high priest of the Musta'li Ismā'ili sect, landed at Cambay. Abdullāh, who was a man of great learning, is said to have stayed some years at Cambay studying the people. Two stories are told of his first missionary success. According to one story he gained a cultivator's heart by filling his dry well with water. According to the other, by dashing to the ground an iron elephant hung in mid-air in one of the Cambay temples, he won over some of the priests. After this the missionary is said to have travelled towards Anahilavāḍa or Patāu, at that time the capital of Gujarāt. The story goes that the ruler of the city, Sidhrāj Jaisingh (A.D. 1094-1143) anxious to see the stranger, sent a force of armed men to bring him to his capital. Finding the saint surrounded by a wall of fire the troops retired. Then the king himself came, and in obedience to the stranger's command the fire opened and let the king pass. Full of wonder, the king asked for one sign more that the new belief was better than the old. His wish was granted; one of his holiest idols declared that the Arab's was the true religion. Hearing these words the Hindus, king and subjects alike, struck with astonishment, embraced the new faith.² For two centuries and a half (A.D. 1130-1380), there was little in the history of Gujarāt to check the progress

¹ Khir Bahādur Kāzi Shalāb-ud-dīn and Briggs' Cities of Gujarāṭ Appendix IX. The Dā'ī prayer-book gives A.D. 1137 (H. 532) as the date of the first missionary's death. Conolly (Journal Asiatic Society, Bengal, VI.-2, §24) gives A.D. 1137 as the date of the conversion, and calls the missionary Muhammad not Abdullāh. Colebrook's Miscellaneous Essays, II, 228. The Mirāt-i-Ahmadi (Persian Text, II, 87) agrees with Conolly in stating that the name of the first Bohora missionary was Mulla Muhammad Ali. He says the shrine of this Pīr at Cambay, known as the shrine of the Pīr-i-Rawān or the Ever-alive Saint, still yearly draws large crowds of Bohorās from all parts of Gujarāt. When Mulla Muhammad Ali landed in Cambay the people of Gujarāt were ignorant of Islām. A Hindu saint was the object of general faith. The Mulla considering open opposition to this saint dangerous and impossible joined the number of his disciples. His intelligence soon attracted the saint's notice. After mastering the language of the country, he studied the saint's holy books and so worked upon his mind as to convert him to his views. Many of the saint's chief followers adopted the new faith. At last news that his minister was a convert reached the Rāja's ears. The Rāja finding his minister at his prayers asked what he was doing. Searching for a snake, said the minister. A snake appeared in a corner and the Rāja became a convert though he kept it secret till on his death-bed he ordered his body to be buried. With the establishment of Muhammadan power many Cambay Bohorās settled in the capital (Pātān). When, in A.D. 1391, Muzaḥfar I. came from Delhi to Gujarāt as governor he brought many priests of the Sunni sect who were active in turning the people to this branch of the faith. Most of the Pātān Shī'ah Bohorās were converted to the Sunni faith and their example was followed by their brethren in the other chief towns though the Bohorās of the country towns and the outlying parts remained Shī'ahs. The Sunnis and the Shī'ahs both being of the same origin intermarried till in A.D. 1535 Sayyid Jāfir Shīrāzi persuaded the Sunnis to keep apart from the Shī'ahs.

² Though Sidhrāj (A.D. 1094-1133) would seem to have died a Hindu, his fondness for religious discussions and his tolerance might, without giving up his own religion, have led him to patronise the Bohora missionary. Rā's Māla, 172 and 314. Both of Sidhrāj's successors, Kamaḍpāla (A.D. 1143-1174) and Ajayāpāla (A.D. 1174-1177) and Sidhrāj's great Jān teacher Hemachārya, at a time when there are no recorded Muslim invasions, are said to have been converted to Islām. Tod's Western India, 181 and 191; Rā's Māla, I, 341. If the Khojāh history is correct the conversion of the Hindu king was about A.D. 1210 that is during the reign of Ajayāpāla's successor Bhubha II. (A.D. 1179-1242). See below page 38.

of the Ismā'īlī faith. But with the establishment of Muzaffar Shāh's power (A.D. 1390-1413) the spread of Sunni doctrines was encouraged, and the Bohora and other Shiāh sects repressed. Since then, probably with gradually lessening numbers, they have passed through several bitter persecutions, meeting with little favour or protection, till at the close of the eighteenth century they found shelter under British rule.¹ The chief event in the modern history of the Bohorās is the transfer in A.D. 1539 (H. 946) of the seat of the head priest of their faith from Yaman to Gujarāt. Till then the Gujarāt Ismā'īlīs had been under the guidance of a high priest at Yaman, to whom pilgrimages were made, tithes paid, and disputes referred for settlement.²

Of schisms from the main body of Shiāh Bohorās there have been four, the JAĀFARĪ, the SULAIMĀNĪ, the ĀLĪĀ, and the NĀGOSHĪ. Of the Jaāfari or Patani schism in A.D. 1494, the most important both from its size and from the fact that the seceders became Sunnis, a separate account is given below (page 34). The origin of the Sulaimānī sect was during the sixteenth century when a Surat Bohora, sent as a missionary to Arabia, succeeded in making a considerable body of converts. These, besides by the regular name of Ismā'īl, from the priest's title of Bīāzī the Fair, became known as Bīāzī Bohorās. For a time they would seem to have considered the Gujarāt high priest their head. But about the close of the sixteenth century (A.D. 1588), Dāūd bin Ajābshāh the high priest of the Gujarāt Bohorās died. Upon his death the Gujarāt Bohorās chose as his successor one Dāūd bin Kutubshāh sending news of the appointment to Yaman. Meanwhile one of the Yaman priesthood, Sulaimān by name, on the strength of a letter said to be from the late high priest, was by the people of Yaman accepted as the successor. He came over to Gujarāt, but finding his claim rejected by all but a very small body, retired to Arabia. Such of the Gujarāt Bohorās as upheld his claims were called Sulaimānis. The next schism was in A.D. 1623 (H. 1034), when one Ālī claimed the succession to the office of high priest and separated with a small band of followers. The last is said to have been as late as A.D. 1789 (H. 1206), when a Bohora seceded, and, starting some novel doctrines, founded the sect of Nāgoshī or non-flesh-eating Bohorās.³

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Bohora's.

¹ The chief Bohora persecutions are said to have been under Sulṭān Ahmad I. (A.D. 1411-1413) and Mahmūd II. (A.D. 1536-1554). Of their troubles in Sulṭān Ahmad's reign the story is told that the chief Malla, because he kept the beginning of the month of Ramazān at a different time from the orthodox reckoning and denied that he did so, was killed by order of the king. Even under the more liberal of the Delhi emperors, the Gujarāt Bohorās are by a friendly writer described as ever involved in the difficulties of concealment and suffering much persecution at the hands of the wicked murderers (Sunni Musalmāns) invested with public authority. Sayyid Nūrullāh quoted in Colcbrook's Miscellaneous Essays, II. 229.

² According to the Bohora accounts there was at the time great want of zeal among the Yaman people and strong faith among the people of Gujarāt. This tempted the high priest Yūsuf-bin-Sulaimān to come and settle at Sīdhpur. Khān Bahādur Kāzī Shahrāb-ud-dīn, as already noticed the success of the Turks (A.D. 1537) in Aden and other coast towns had probably something to do with this movement. Journal Asiatic Society of Bengal, VI. 2, 812.

³ See below page 34.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Da'udī
Bohoras.

Da'udīs,¹ the main body of Shiāh Bohorās are the richest, best organized, and most widely spread class of Gujarāt Musalmāns. Besides chance traders, settlements are found within the province of Gujarāt; in Kachh, at Bhuj and Māndvi; in Kāthiāvāda, at Bhāvnagar, Limbdi, Rājkot, Sorath, and Wadhvān; and in Gujarāt proper, at Ahmedābād, Ahmednagar, Bālasinor, Bhojva near Virāmgām, Bioach, Cambay, Dohad, Godhra, Gogha, Lunavāda, Navsāri, Surat, and Vāghra. In other parts of the Bombay Presidency they are found in Bassein, Belgaum, Bombay, Karāchi, Khāndesh, Kolhāpur, Mālegaon, Nāsik, Panāla, Poona, Sātara, and Thāna. In other parts of India: in Central India, at Indor, Rāmpur, Ratlām, Sironj, and Ujjain; in Rajputāna, at Jaipur Jodhpur and Udepur; at Burhānpur in Berār; at Aurangābād Haidarābād and Jālwa in the Nizām's dominions; in many places in Madras and Mysore; and at a few places in Bengal. Out of India, westwards in Aden, Basrah, Jeddah, Makka, Maskat, and Zanzibār; and eastwards in China, Moulmain, Rangoon, and Siam. The total strength of the Gujarāt community is estimated at about 130,000.

Though active and well made, few Dādūdi Bohorās are muscular or even robust. Their features are regular and clear, the colour olive, the expression gentle and shrewd. They shave the head, wear long thin beards, and cut the hair on the upper lip close. Many of the women are said to be beautiful and fair-skinned with delicate features. Following the precept and to some extent the example of the Prophet, they are careful to keep their eyelids pencilled with collyrium, their teeth blackened with missi an astringent powder, and the palms of their hands and the soles of their feet reddened with henna. Their home tongue is Gujarāti marked by some peculiarities of dialect,² and the use of several Arab words well pronounced even by women who have not learned Arabic. Except a few, who, having performed a pilgrimage to Karbala or returned from a voyage to China or some foreign country have of late years adopted the Arab costume, a Dādūdi wears at home a silk or white cotton skullcap, a jacket of white cloth, a shirt falling below the knee, and trousers of white or striped cotton cloth loose above and tight near the ankle. Out of doors he wears a small white turban,³ a waistcoat, a Hindu-shaped coat angarkha, trousers the same as those worn in the house, and long shoes called ujjaini. The Dādūdi woman wears a red dark-blue or yellow cotton or silk scarf odna; in north Gujarāt a light tight-fitting silk bodice and in south Gujarāt a silk jacket dagli, a silk petticoat, and shoes of wood in the north and of leather in the south.

¹ The Dādūdis are also called Lotīs, a name ordinarily derived from lota a waterpot because their turban is shaped like a lota. Faria (A.D. 1664) speaks of the Musalmāns of Gujarāt as Lautens, partly strangers partly native converts. Ker's Voyages, VI. 229.

² The chief peculiarities are the irregular use of the dental and palatal d and t and of kh for gu.

³ There are four forms of the Dādūdi turban. The Ujjain much like the Kāyasth head-dress, the smallest and most neatly wound; the Ahmedābād worn by the high priest, somewhat more raised and looser; the Surat, higher and fuller; and the Kāthiāvāda conical in shape, with a strip of gold cloth arranged in the hollow of the cone. The boy's turban is of the same shape as the man's but of orange ochre or dark-brown instead of white.

Their holiday dress is very rich, of embroidered silk and brocade. Out of doors, over the dress they wear a large dark-coloured silk veil-robe called burka passing over the head. This covers the face leaving small net openings in front of the eyes, and drapes in loose folds to the ground shrouding the whole figure. Both Hindu and Musalmán ornaments are worn.

Except that they are sparing in what they eat, taking care that nothing is wasted; that because of its cheapness many of them use beef; that with them fish, like other animals, must, to be lawful food, die under a Musalmán's knife; and that they are specially scrupulous to use no intoxicating drug or stimulant, in their food and way of eating Dáúdís do not differ from ordinary Musalmáns.

Dáúdi Bohorás are noted for their fondness for living in large and airy houses, and for their love of display in house ornaments and furniture.¹ The Gujaráti proverb says Vohoránó mál rodamán jūē The Bohorás' ruin is mortar.

Except the inhabitants of a few villages in Dholka in north Gujarát who are peasants, and some who have risen high in Government service, almost all Dáúdis live by trade. Some are merchants having large dealings with Arabia China Siam and Zanzibar; others are local traders in hardware silks hides and horns and live cattle; but most are town and village shopkeepers, selling hardware cloth stationery books groceries and spices, and a few in Ahmedábád Baroda and Surat are confectioners. The women do house work, sewing spinning and weaving cotton turbans and women's robes.

Surat Dáúdis are shrewder more pushing and fonder of show and good living but less contented and religious than those of north Gujarát. As a class, all are quiet clean tidy hardworking and sober. Especially in Surat they are prosperous, many of them rich and the bulk well-to-do; the poor are thrifty and free from debt, and the unfortunate are maintained from a common fund.

¹ Sir John Malcolm (A.D. 1823) says (Central India, II. 3) 'The Bohorás have brought in European improvements in constructing their houses and furniture.' Forbes in the Rás Máli (I. 63) speaks of the houses of Nidhpur Bohorás as 'half European in form with balustered terraces and windows fenced with venetian screens.' In Rámdir the Bohora houses are one of the chief objects of interest in the town. In Surat many of the best of the modern houses belong to Bohorás. The following gives some idea of a rich Surat Bohora's house. The house is raised on a plinth six or seven feet above the level of the road. It is three stories high, of brick faced with richly carved timber, and is built round a court about eighteen feet square. Passing through a dark and untidy entrance and up steep and narrow wooden stairs in the front part of the first floor is a sitting room about twelve feet square. The ceiling is closely hung with European metal lamps and glass chandeliers, and the windows have, inside of their regular frames, English-made plates of stained glass decorated with verses of the Kuraán. The floor is richly carpeted, cushions are set round the walls, and in the middle are tables covered with ornaments. Between the front and back rooms the walls of the passage are bright with groups of brass plates saucers and drinking vessels. On the second floor in the back part of the house, a large room, about thirty feet by sixteen, has the walls coloured, the floor richly carpeted, and along the wall rows of closely packed sofas and chairs. Above is a third public room full of furniture with a large German organ in the place of honour; and let into the walls niches and cabinets stocked with Chinese and Japanese cups, English vases, and Constantinople mugs of gilt-streaked glass. Along the walls, above the cabinets, are rows of China dishes.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Da'udí
Bohora's.

Chapter II:
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Da'udī
Bohorā's.

Dāūdīs are Shiāhs of the Mustaālīan division of the great Ismāīlī sect.¹ They are attentive to their religious duties, many both men and women knowing the Kurān. They are careful to say their prayers, to observe Muharram as a season of mourning, and to go on pilgrimage to Makkah and Karbala. They strictly abstain from music and dancing and from using or dealing in intoxicating drinks or drugs. Though fierce sectarians, keenly hating and hated by the regular Sunnis and other Musalmāns not of the Dāūdī sect, their reverence for Ali and for their high priest seems to be further removed from adoration than among the Khojāhs.² They would seem to accept the ordinary distinctions of right and wrong, punishing drunkenness, adultery, and other acts generally held disgraceful. Of the state after death they hold that after passing a time of freedom as bad spirits, unbelievers go to a place of torment. Believers, but apparently only believers of the Ismāīlī faith, after a term of training enter a state of perfection. Among the faithful each disembodied spirit passes the term of training in communion with the soul of some good man. The disembodied spirit can suggest good or evil to the man, and may learn from his good deeds to love the right; when the good man dies the spirits in communion with his soul are, if they have gained by their training, attached to some more perfect man, or, if they have lost their opportunities, they are sent back to learn; spirits raised to a higher degree of knowledge are placed in communion with the High Priest; and on his death are with him united to the Imāms, and when through the Imāms they have learnt what they still require to know, they are absorbed in perfection. Of late the Dāūdīs have made few converts, and those chiefly servants and Hindu women taken in marriage. They would seem to share all the ordinary Indian beliefs in spirit-possession and exorcism and in charms and omens.

¹ Of the position of the Dāūdī Bohorās among Muslim sectaries, Mr. Mirza Abūl Husain of Bombay has prepared the following account. In A.D. 766, upon the death of Ja'far Sādik, according to the Shiāhs the sixth Imām, a dispute arose whether Ismā'il the son of Ja'far's eldest son, or Mūsī Kāzim, Ja'far's second son should succeed. The majority who supported Mūsī form the orthodox community of Shiāhs, who from the number of their Imāms, the last of whom is still to come, are known as Jana-ashari or 'Twelvers'. The supporters of Mūsī's nephew started as a distinct body, and under the name of Ismā'ilīs, especially in Egypt, rose to great power. They remained united till in A.D. 1094 on the death of Almustansir-billah the succession was disputed. Of the late Khalīfah's two sons, Nazir the elder, at first named for the succession, was afterwards passed over in favour of his younger brother Almustā'li. A party of the Ismā'ilīs, holding that an elder son could not thus be deprived of his right to succeed, declared for him, and were called Nazirians. The other party, called from the younger son Mustaālīans, prevailed and established Mustā'li as successor to his father. The Nazirians are at this day represented in India by the Khojāhs and the Mustaālīans by the Bohorās. Sir H. T. Colclouche (Miscellaneous Essays, II, 226 and 227) and Mr. Conolly (Jour. As. Soc. Bengal, VI.-2, 847) hold that the Bohorās are true Shiāhs, not, as represented, Ismā'ilīs. But the accuracy of the account given above is borne out by the half-Arabic half-Gujarātī prayer-book called Sahīfat-us-said in use among the Dāūdī Bohorās, where in the list of Imāms (Chap. VII. note 2) the name of Mustā'li and not of Nazir is entered, and by the fact that the co-religionists of the Dāūdīs in Yamau are there called Ismā'ilīs.

² In danger and difficulty the Dāūdīs are said, though this is at least unusual, to call on the head Mulla for help, vowing him presents. Oriental Christian Spectator (1848) LX. 142. Former Mullās are prayed to, and their tombs kissed and revered, like those of the saints of other Musalmāns.

Except for some peculiarities in their names¹; that they attach special importance to circumcision; that the sacrifice or akikah ceremony is held in the Mulla's house; that at marriage the bride and bridegroom when not of age are represented by sponsors or wális; that at death a prayer for pity on his soul and body is laid in the dead man's hands²; and that on certain occasions the High Priest feeds the whole community,³ Dáúdí customs do not, so far as has been ascertained, differ from those of ordinary Musalmáns.

The completeness of their class arrangements, the envy of other Muhammadaus, is the most marked feature of the Dáúdí Bohorás. Their leader, both in things religious and social, is the head Mulla of Surat.⁴ The ruling Mulla names his successor, generally but it is said not always, from among the members of his own family. Short

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Da'udí
Bohoras.

¹ Boys' names end in ji as Dáúdí and Ismáílí, or in Ali as Yúsuf Ali and Sharaf Ali. A few girls have Hindu names, but among the lower class Bohorás most are oddly changed Muhammadan names, Khata or Khatali for Khatijah, Fatúdí for Fatimah, and Kshu or Khli for Kyesiah.

² The words of this prayer are :

I seek shelter with the Great God and with his excellent nature against Satan, who has been overwhelmed with stones. O God, this slave of yours who has died and upon whom you have decreed death, is weak and poor and needs your mercy. Pardon his sins, be gracious to him, and raise his soul with the souls of the Prophets, and the truthful, the martyrs, and the holy, for to be with them is good. This is Thy bounty. O God have mercy on his body that stays in the earth, and show him thy kindness so that he may be freed from pain and that the place of his refuge may be good. By your favourite angels; by the serene angels; by your messengers the Prophets the best of the created; and by the Chosen Prophet the choice Amín Muhammad the best of those who have walked on earth and whom heaven has overshadowed; and by his successor Ali the son of Abi Tálib, the father of the noble Imáms and the bearer of heavy burdens from off the shoulders of your Prophet; and by our Lady Fátimah-i-zahra, and by the Imáms her offspring Hasan and Husain, descendants of your Prophet; and by Ali, son of Husain; and by Muhammad son of Ali; and Ja'far son of Muhammad; and Ismáíl son of Ja'far; and Muhammad son of Ismáíl; and Abdulláh-al-mastúr; and Ahmad al-mastúr; and Husain-al-mastúr; and our Lord Mahdí; and our Lord Káim; and our Lord Mansúr; and our Lord Muizz; and our Lord Azíz; and our Lord Hákim; and our Lord Zahir; and our Lord Mustávir; and our Lord Musta'li; and our Lord Amir; and our Lord the Imám-al-Tayyib, Abdú Kásim Amir-al-mominin, and by their deputies and their representatives; and by the apostles; and by the Káim-i-Akhir-al-zamán (a) and his representatives; and by the religious Imáms of his time, may the blessings of God be upon them, and by the apostle da'í (b) for the time being our Sayad and Lord (c)

; and our Sayad the deputy of his Lordship (d)

; and our Sayad the neighbour of his Lordship (e)

; and the ministers of law who are learned and just. God is the best representative and the best defender. There is no power nor virtue but in God.

a Title of the Mahdí the coming Imám.

b Title of the High Priest or Mulla Sáhib.

c This blank is for the name of the High Priest.

d Blank for the deputy's name.

e Blank for the neighbour's or assistant's name.

³ Public feasts paid for out of the head Mulla's funds are given on the first ten days of Muharram and on the third day of Ramazin, also on the occasion of any marriage or death in the Mulla's family. When a high priest dies his successor feasts the people for three days, and again on the tenth and fortieth days, and at the end of a year.

⁴ The seat of the chief Mulla would seem to have been several times moved before it was fixed at Surat in the latter part of the eighteenth century. The places where the head Mulla's seat has been established are: Sillipur, Ahmedabad, Navánagar, Mándvi, Ujjain, and Burhánpur. Since their settlement in Surat the following high priests have ruled: Najm-ud-dín, A.D. 1785; Seif-ud-dín, A.D. 1797; Izz-ud-dín, A.D. 1817; Zein-ud-dín, A.D. 1831; Badr-ud-dín, A.D. 1837; Najm-ud-dín, A.D. 1842; Husain-ud-dín, A.D. 1852; Husám-ud-dín, A.D. 1893; and Burhán-ud-dín who succeeded to the giddi or throne one month after the death of Husám-ud-dín in A.D. 1893.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Da'udī
Bohora's.

of worship the head Mulla is treated with the greatest respect. He lives in much state¹ and entertains with the most profuse liberality. On both religious and civil questions his authority is final. Discipline is enforced in religious matters by fine, and in cases of adultery drunkenness and other offences by fine, flogging,² and excommunication. Every considerable settlement of Dāūdīs has its Mulla or deputy of the head Mulla. He is their leader in religious matters, and when disputes arise he calls a meeting of the chief members and decides the point. From this decision an appeal lies to the head Mulla in Surat.³

Besides the head Mulla or Dāī, there are Mullās of four grades, Māzun or literally the permitted (to rule), Mukāsir or the executor, Mashāikh or the elder, and Mulla or the guardian. They do not depend for support on their people, but earn their livelihood as school-masters or by practising some craft. Any well-behaved youth with a good knowledge of Arabic may be admitted into the lowest grade of Mullās, and, as he shows himself worthy, is raised in rank next to the head Mulla. To train youths for the duties of Mulla a college was in A.D. 1809 founded in Surat, and is still (A.D. 1897), though on a greatly reduced scale, kept up at a yearly charge of about Rs. 10,000.⁴ Besides the central college, every Dāūdī settlement has its school, where, under the charge of the Mulla and generally by a Sunni Muealmān teacher, boys and girls are taught to read the Kura'n. Besides on education, the head Mulla spends large sums in feeding and clothing strange and destitute Dāūdīs, and in helping the poor among his people to meet the expenses of marriages and other costly ceremonies.⁵ The funds to meet this outlay and to support the state of the head Mulla are raised from fines, from a special

¹ On ceremonial occasions the head Mulla sits on his throne and in token of his power has the fly-flapper chauri held before him. As the Bohorās enter they make three prostrations sūdas, close their hands, and stand before him. To such as are worthy he says Be seated, to others stand. (Oriental Christian Spectator (1848), IX, 142.) Once a year, on the eighteenth Rajab, every Dāūdī lays his palm within the head Mulla's hand and takes an oath to be faithful. The Mulla adds, "From the power of Muhammad, and from the feet of the Imāms Janna and Tarjāb, and from the order of the Mulla see that you do not swerve. The face of him that forsakes will be blackened before God and he will go to hell." (Bāmdād, VI, 27, 31 (1863).) On this day when he goes to the mosque the Dāūdīs are said to kiss the Mulla's footsteps, and to apply the dust he trends to their heads and eyes. (Bāmdād ditto.)

² Flogging is seldom practised. Khān Bahādur Kūzī Shāhib-ud-dīn.

³ Next to Surat the chief settlement of Dāūdīs is in Bombay, and the third is in Ahmedābād. Besides to Ahmedābād Mullās are, in Gujarat, appointed to Bālasinor, Baroda, Bhāvnagar, Bhujwa near Viramgam, Broach, Bhima, Cambay, Dolad, Godhra, Gogha, Jamnāl, Lunāvāṇa, Māndvi in Kachh, Morvi, Navānagar, Pālaupur, Pātān, Rājkot, Sūlhpur, Vīnagar, and Wadhvān; in other parts of the Bombay Presidency, to Belgaum, Junnar, the Konkan, and Poona. In other parts of India to Aurangābād, Burhānpur, Hyderabad, Mandeshr, and Ujjain; and beyond India in Arabia to Jeddah and Mokka, and in the Persian Gulf to Maskat and Basrah.

⁴ At this school from 150 to 200 boys are clothed fed and taught Arabic, geometry, logic, and law. They come from all parts of India and even from Arabia. Most of them stay for about three years.

⁵ For a sick or destitute Dāūdī, the Mulla provides food and clothing, and if need be lodging. Poor Dāūdīs are daily supplied with cooked food by the Mulla, and sometimes with clothing and money. In return they are made to work. Oriental Christ. Spec. IX, 142.

subscription of a fifth part of their income called khums,¹ and from the regular Musalman alms zakāt. Though they seem little inclined to teach their children English or to take to other than their hereditary calling of trade, the Dāūdīs for shrewdness and enterprise hold their own with any class of traders in western India, and of late years the growing use of iron has been a source of special gain to them.

Sulaima'ni Bohora's, since their rise at the close of the sixteenth century (A.D. 1591), have made little progress in Gujarāt. In A.D. 1848 there are said to have been fifty families in Surat, 250 families in Broach, and more in Haidarābād. At present (A.D. 1896) there are said to be one or two resident families in Surat, two or three in Broach, and as many in Cumbay.² The seat of the head Mulla has always been in Yaman. In A.D. 1872 Hasan bin Ismā'il, the ruling head, was captured by the Turkish government, and some of his territory taken from him. The present head, Ahmad bin Ismā'il, lives in Najrān in the Hejāz in Arabia. In look, belief, and customs the Sulaimānis do not differ much from the Dāūdi Bohorās, with whom they associate but do not intermarry. During the last thirty years the Sulaimāni Bohorās have made many changes and improvements. The late Mr. Tayyibji, who though he had settled in Bombay belonged to Gujarāt, was the first Sulaimāni to give his sons a liberal education in English. Sulaimānis are now barristers engineers and doctors and one is a Judge of the Bombay High Court. The Sulaimānis have almost given up the Gujarāt Bohora dress and turban. Their home language is both Gujjarāti and Hindustāni and they have begun to intermarry with regular Musalmāns.

Ali, who in A.D. 1624 founded the sect of Alia Bohora's, was the son of Ibrāhīm, one of the sons of Shaikh Adam, the head Mulla. The father passing over his sons, named one Shaikh Tayyib as his successor, and in spite of the efforts of his sons, who joined in support of Ali's claims, only a very small number refused to accept Shaikh Tayyib as their head. Like the Sulaimānis, the Alia's do not intermarry with the Dāūdis, and do not differ from them in appearance or customs.

Na'goshis, Nonfleshites, are, according to the account generally given by the Dāūdis, a very recent schism, not earlier than A.D. 1789. The founder is said either to have been excommunicated or to have withdrawn from the Alia sect, because he held certain peculiar doctrines, the most prominent among which was that to eat animal food was sin. From this his followers were called Nāgoshi non-flesheating Bohorās. These Nāgoshi Bohorās would seem to have nothing to do with the Ali-ilāhiya sect mentioned by Farishtah, who believed in

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADEES.

Sulaima'ni
Bohora's.

Alia
Bohora's.

Na'goshi
Bohora's.

¹ This fifth or khums is the same as the Khālfās used to get (see Elliot's History, I. 474). Besides a fifth of their incomes, the head Mulla is said to have a right to the fifth of all property including sons, but not, it is said, daughters. The fifth child if a boy, is either redeemed with money or made the Mulla's servant. A householder is also said at all family events from a birth to a death, to pay the Mulla 8 to 12 annas; ² The property of a man without heirs goes to the Mulla.

² Khān Bahādūr Mūzi Shihab-ud-dīn.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Jaa'fari
Bohora's.

metempsychosis, and that Ali was an incarnation of God.¹ At present (A.D. 1897) the strength of the sect in Gujarāt is said to have fallen to four householders, all settled in Baroda. They intermarry with Alia but not with Dādūdi Bohorās.

Jaa'fari Bohora's are descendants of the Dādūdi Bohorās who went over to the orthodox faith on the advent of Muza'ffar I. as governor of Gujarāt in A.D. 1391. The Dādūdi Bohorās and the Bohorās who were then converted to the orthodox faith kept up their marriage relations until their connection was severed by Sayad Jaa'far Shīrāzi about A.D. 1535.² From their head-quarters they are known as Patānis; from their convertor as Jaa'faris; and because they are Sunnis, as Badi Jamāt the large body, and Chār Yāzi or believers in the Prophet's four companions as-habs.

As told by the Dādūdi Bohorās, the story of the Patāni Bohorās' conversion to the orthodox faith is that a certain Jaa'far had, as was then the custom, gone from Gujarāt to Yaman to study for the priesthood. On his return about A.D. 1494, Jaa'far, without taking the necessary license, began to practise as a priest. For this he was excommunicated, and in revenge, becoming a Sunni, drew from the Shi'ah community a large body of followers. The true story is that they are called Jaa'faris from Sayad Ahmad Jaa'far Shīrāzi, one of the ornaments of Mahmūd Begada's reign. The proof of this is that they still consider him their pīr, and still have his descendants as their spiritual guides.³ Patāni Bohorās are found in considerable numbers in all the towns and chief villages of Gujarāt. In appearance they differ somewhat from the Dādūdis, resembling Memans and other Sunni Musalmāns. They speak Hindustāni in towns and Gujarāti in villages. In dress a Patāni Bohora differs from an ordinary Musalmān only by his round narrow-rimmed brown or black turban.⁴ Except that their trousers are a little looser and that out-of-doors some of them wear the veil-cloak or turka, their women dress like the Muslim women of Surat. Their occupation is trade, and some of those who trade with Arabia follow many Arab customs. Some are merchants but most keep hardware and glass shops, and some are pedlars, and, in Ahmedābād and Patan, silk weavers. Besides house-work their women weave silk. Except that they are stingier and more given to tobacco and opium, they are much like the Dādūdis. As a class their condition is good, some being rich and only a few in debt. They are Sunnis in faith, and are religious, most of them even the women knowing the Kura'n and saying their prayers. They have no special religious head: but many follow spiritual guides. A

¹ Colebrooke's Essays, II. 226.

² Mirāt-i-Ahmedi Persian Text, II. 87.

³ So great a reverence is paid to this Sayad Ahmed Jaa'far that Hindus in Ahmedābād will not take their dead by the street that passes through his tomb, for they say that the body would never afterwards burn. This Sayad Ahmed, says the Mirāt-i-Ahmedi (II. 40-41), was the son of a Sayad Jaa'far who came from Sindh and settled his son Sayad Ahmed in Ahmedābād and returned to Sindh. Sayad Ahmed is said to have had the power of working miracles. In a prayer of two genuflections (valadats) he used to repeat half the Kura'n. He performed the pilgrimage to Makkah on foot.

⁴ Young men wear a red turban.

considerable number of them are known as kabris from being devoted to the tomb of Pir Muhammad Sháh at Ahmedábád. Among them boys have such ordinary names as Ūmar, Usmán, and Ali preceded by Mián or followed by Bhái; girls' names are like those borne by Dáúdi women. Except the Surat Sunni Bohorás who intermarry with all classes, Jáfáris marry only among themselves and celebrate their marriages without any processions. Each settlement has its headman and forms a fairly organized body, the rich members meeting at intervals and subscribing to help the poor. On the whole their prospects are good. Some of them enter Government service and they teach their children Gujaráti and Urdu and some of them English.

Da'u'dis. See BOHORÁS.

Du'dwa'la's,¹ Milkmen, also called Gádits or cartmen, and from their former castes Sábaliás and Gaulis, are found in all parts of the province, especially in Ahmedábád and Baroda. They are said to be converted Hindus chiefly of the Sábaliá and Gauli castes. The class contains no subdivisions. The men are tall fair well made and with good features, and wear the hair moderate long and a scanty beard. The women are handsome, often with gray eyes and rather curly hair. They speak Gujaráti. Except that they wear a three-cornered Marátha-like turban and in some cases a waistcloth, the men dress like Musalmáns with shirt and trousers. The women wear the Hindu dress. They sell milk and hire out carts. The women milk and look after the cows and buffaloes. They are quiet sober hardworking thrifty and tidy, but have a bad name for mixing their milk with water. They are Sunnis in name, but are not a religious class, only a few knowing the Kuraán or being careful to say their prayers. As among Hindus, the women join in the marriage procession, singing Gujaráti songs, and at deaths wailing and beating the breast. Like Pársis they add ji to their names as Ismáílji. They marry only among themselves and form a separate community with a headman. They teach their children Gujaráti and some of them English. Though on the whole fairly off, none have risen to any high position.

Ga'dits. See DÚDWÁLÁS.

Gaulis. See DÚDWÁLÁS.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS
TRADERS.
Jaa farl
Bohora's.

Da u'dis
Du'dwa'la's

Ga dits.
Gaulis.

¹ The Mirat-i-Ahmedi (Persian Text, II. 47) calls the Dúdwálás and Pínjirás or cotton-cleaners by the general title of Mansúris. The writer says both classes were followers of Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri otherwise styled Rájo Shabíd, a Mahdavi preacher who was killed at Ahmedábád during the viceroyalty of Aurangzib (A.D. 1614-1646). These sectarians were called Mansúris from being the spiritual followers of Abú Mughís Husáin Ibn al Manúár al Halláj that is Mansúr the cotton-cleaner who lived in the reign of the eighteenth Abbási Al Muktaḍir (A.D. 908-932). Mansúr was crucified on a charge of being a Sūfi and a free-thinker in A.H. 322. The following verses of Mansúr are held in high respect by Muslim mystics:

Allah has thrown man in the deep sea pinioned and has said to him

Beware beware lest thou wettest thyself.

Another couplet he is said to have repeated on the cross:

I would not have been had I known how I came to be.

And I would not have not been had I known how not to be.

Quoted in Ibn al Khallikán's Wasáit ul Ayyán.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Kara'illa's.

Kara'illa's, Potters, 68, are found in Ahmedābād city. They are descendants of Hindus of the Kumbhār or potter caste, and are of middle stature and fair. The men shave the head and wear the beard. The women are fair handsome and strong. They speak Gujarātī. The men dress like poor Musalmāns, and the women like Hindus, except that they wear silver bracelets of Musalmān pattern. They sell but do not make pots. The men work as labourers messengers and house servants, the women mind the shop. The men are quiet honest and thrifty, but lazy and fond of opium. They are well-to-do, some of them very prosperous. They are Sunnis in name, paying little attention to religion; only a few of them knowing the Kura'n or caring to say their prayers. They marry among themselves and with the Kathiārās or woodcutters. With the Kathiārās they form one body jama'āt, and have a headman to settle disputes. They have a class-lodge vādī in Ahmedābād, where during the mango season they hold feasts, enforcing attendance by fine. They have begun to send their children to Government schools, and, on the whole, are well-to-do.

Khoja's

Khoja's,¹ Honourable Converts,² are scattered all over Gujarāt in Kachh, Kāthiāvāḍa, in the Portuguese territories of Din and Daman, Ahmedābād, Baroda, and Surat. Beyond Gujarāt Khojās are to be found within the Presidency in Sindh, Thāna, Khāndesh, and Bombay, beyond the Presidency in Calcutta, the Panjāb, Kashmir, Kābul, Dārdistān, Nagar Hmūza,³ and in the Persian Gulf, in Behrein, Bandar-Abbās, Mīna, Linga, and Kism. In Turkish Arabia Khojās occur in Karbala and Shūh Najaf, and, in Arabia proper, in Maskat, Aden, and Sheher Mukalla. There is a flourishing colony of Khojās in Zanzibār. Khojās are of seven divisions⁴: First Khedwāya-Momna Khojās; Second Gujar-Gupti Khojās; Third Multāni Khojās; Fourth Atlai-Khurasāni Khojās; Fifth Mochi-Momna Khojās; Sixth Soni-Lohūr Khojās; Seventh Kābni and Badakhshāni Khojās.

As noticed under Bohorās (page 30) the Khojās are Ismāīliās of the Nazāriān subdivision who, separated in A.D. 1024 from the Mustāīliān Ismāīliās on a question regarding the succession to ¹ The Turkish word Khojāh seems to be a title. In Persian pronounced Khājeh (written Khurājeh) it means lord, teacher and merchant, also like maula both sirf and master. Burton's Sindh, 412.

² The Great Khojāh Case of 1866 pages 10-12.

³ Bidulph in his Tribes of the Hindu Kush (page 118) says: 'The influence of the Iskandri princes introduced Shi'ism while the tenets of the Maulās have made their way from the Oxus valley across the passes of the Hindu Kush. Except the population of Nagar and two-thirds of the people of Balkh the rest belong to the Nūr Baksh sect. The Mir of Hunza and the whole population of that place are Maulās. By the Nūr Baksh sect Khojās are meant. Farishtah (Persian Text, II, 615-16) calls the Kashmiri Khojās the followers of Nūr Baksh. By the word Maulāi from maula lord and master a title of Ali, are meant the followers of Ali. His Highness Agha Khān had and still has (A.D. 1897) great influence over the cutting tribes of the Upper Indus valley. His followers are called Maulās. A portion of the offerings made to Agha Khān's deputies, who are called Pirs and are much respected, is turned into cash and sent yearly to His Highness Agha Khān in Bombay. Bidulph's Tribes of the Hindu Kush, 120.

⁴ The Khojāh Variānt (page 253) by Mr. Sahebudin Nānjiani Assistant Revenue Commissioner of Kachh.

the throne of the Fâtimate Khilâfah in Egypt which was founded in A.D. 910 (H. 297) by Obeidullah (A.D. 872-931) a missionary (Dâ'i) of Abdullah Mainûn. The cause of Nazâr, the elder son of Al-Mustansirbillah (A.D. 1036-1095), one of the claimants to the Egyptian succession, was espoused and energetically promoted, especially in Persia where it subsequently rose to be supreme, by Hasan Sabâh an Ismâ'ilian missionary who was born at Rai, about fifteen miles south of Teherân now in ruins, in the beginning of the eleventh century. Hasan founded the order of the Fidawis or Fidâis or devotees known in Europe probably from their leader's name as the Assassins.¹ Hasan concentrated his power at Alamût or the Falcon's Nest, an impregnable hill fort on the borders of the Persian district of Dailem, about 200 miles north of Kazwin, which, with a small section of the surrounding country, he had acquired in the latter part of the eleventh century partly by stratagem partly by purchase from the commandant of the Saljuki emperor Malakshâh (A.D. 1072-1092). After gaining Alamût, Hasan resolved to cease acting as dâ'i or missionary and political emissary of the Fâtimites, and, though he did not yet arrogate to himself the title of Unrevealed Imâm, he made himself known by the convenient style of Shaikh-ul-Jabal Lord, or, according to the crusaders, Old Man of the Mountain, a title which two of his immediate successors continued to use. Before his death at an advanced age in A.D. 1124, Hasan had the satisfaction of leaving his order flourishing and bidding fair to undermine by his Fidawis' poignard,² as well as by the levelling force of his doctrines, the neighbouring monarchies of Islâm. His successors becoming the terror of kings and the authors of revolutions, ruled from the confines of Khurâsân to the mountains of Syria and from the Caspian Sea to the Mediterranean.³ Hasan (A.D. 1163, H. 559), the son of Muhammad the son of Buzurg-Umeid, the fourth ruler on the pontifical throne of Alamût, threw aside the mystery with which the son of Sabâh had deemed it politic to surround his doctrines. He declared himself the Unrevealed Imâm and preached that no action of a believer in him could be a sin.⁴ He is called the "Ruler of the world who loosened the bonds of the Law." No Khojâh mentions his name without the words A'la Zikri-his-Salâm Peace be to his name.⁵

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khojâhs.

¹ On the other hand Sir Joseph Arnould observes: It is likely enough that the etymology insisted upon by Silvestre de Sacy should be correct and the origin be the word by which the families of Alamût and Mâssunt were designated in the eastern languages. This name is Hash-shi-shita, a word derived from the use of Hashish blang or hemp-water with which Hasan and his successors subdued the souls while they inflamed the energies of the Fidawis whom they employed as their . . . instruments. (The Great Khojâh Case of A.D. 1866.) Against this derivation it is to be noted that not one of the Arab or Persian historians of the time designates the Ismâ'ilians by the title of Hash-shi-shitas. All call them Mulakshâh or heretics. (Elliot, II. 353-357; Farishtah Persian Text, II. 615-616.)

² The primary meaning of فدوي fidai from the Arabic فداء fidâ he sacrificed, is scapegoat. The Ismâ'ili Fidawis were the volunteers of the order courting death for its glory. Sir Joseph Arnould styles them the self-offering or devoted. The Great Khojâh Case of 1866 page 9.

³ Von Hammer's Assassins by Leo, 77-88, 91-92.

⁴ Leo's Translation of Von Hammer's Assassins, 109.

⁵ Mir Khond on the authority of Yûsuf Shâh Kâtib (or the Scribe) relates that over

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
TRADERS,
Khoja'ns.

It is through this Hasan that His Highness Agha Khán traces his descent from Ali.¹ The Indian Khojás further believe that Hasan was the first of their Imáms to send a missionary to India. The name of this missionary was Núr Satágur.² In his fourth expedition to Multán (A.D. 1005) Mahmúd of Ghazni (A.D. 1001-1030) is said to have expelled the Karmatians from Multán.³ In A.D. 1175 Muhammad Ghori (A.D. 1152-1206) again delivered Multán from Karmatian rule.⁴ In the beginning of the reign of Sultánah Razíah (A.D. 1237-1240) Miuháj-us-Siráj the author of the *Tabakát-i-Násiri*⁵ speaks as an eye-witness of the Muláhilah heretics of Hindustán being seduced by a person with some pretensions to learning called "Núr the Turk" (probably Núr Satágur the missionary of Hasan Zikri-his-salám), "flocking to him in large numbers from all parts of Hindustán such as Sindh, Gujarát, the environs of Delhi, and the banks of the Ganges and Jamna." Miuháj-us-Siráj goes on to say that when Núr preached the rabble gathered around him. He used to call the learned Sunnis Nisibís or enemies of Ali and usurpers of his patrimony and their followers Marjís or hopefuls. On Friday the 6th of Rajab n. 631 (March 1237) his followers to the number of a thousand men inflamed by his fulminations against the orthodox, and armed with swords shields arrows and other weapons attacked the Jámá Mosque of Delhi and slew many of the congregation assembled there till they were routed with great loss by the officers of the empress Razíah. According to the Khojáh accounts Núruddín, or as they call him Núr-Satágur, came from Deilam to Patán in Gujarát, when that country was governed by a Hindu prince apparently the Soláñki Bhíma II. (A.D. 1179-1242). He made a number of converts by ordering the idols of a Hindu temple to speak and bear testimony to the truth of his mission. He is said to have returned to Persia shortly after converting the Hindu ruler of Patán secretly to his faith.⁶ On his second visit to Gujarát he married the daughter of Rájá Súrehand, chief or governor of Navsári near Surat. His success as a proselytizer and his wealth exciting the envy of his followers he was killed by Chách one of his two leading disciples while he was absorbed in samádhi or contemplation. The name Núr-Satágur Teacher of pure light which he took in addition to his own name Núr-ud-dín or Núrsháh and the practice of the Hindu abstraction or samádhi show the process by which the first Ismáíli preachers succeeded in converting Hindus.⁷ The Ismáíli preachers gained their chief success among the Afghán tribe of Lohá-nas. According to the tribe legends preserved by the Khojás the the door of the library of Ala-mút, Ha-an had caused the following couplet to be engraved:

Har-i kásh-baqut-shar-ash-i láli-i 'Izzatí
Matáddám-i rástá-ir-shah-Zikri-his-salám,

With the help of God he hath undone the cedar of the Law,

The ruler of the world He of blessed memory.

VON HANSEN'S ANNALES—Wood, 108-109.

¹ The Great Khojáh Case of 1866 page 9 paragraph 1.

² The Khojáh Vratant, 165.

³ Elliot, II. 441-443.

⁴ Elliot, II. 299.

⁵ Elliot, II. 335-336.

⁶ The Khojáh hymn called Romai in the Khojáh Vratant, 155. Cf. page 26 note 2.

⁷ Another Ismáíli missionary Sadf-ud-dín adopted the Hindu names of Sah-deva, and Harehand. Apart from its popularity with Hindus the adoption of a Hindu name

Lohānas are descended from Lava, a son of Rāma, who founded the tribe of the Rāthors to which the Lohānas belong. According to another story of which there seem to be several versions Rāja Jaichand of Kanauj took to wife an Afghān woman who was made captive after the defeat of Shahāb-ud-dīn Ghori (A.D. 1178) and who in revenge caused Jaichand's death. Jaichand's son to quiet his father's angry spirit was advised to feed many Brāhma-Kshātris. The Kshātri refused and fled to Lahuragadh. The title Khwājāh meaning Lord which they received on their conversion to Islām from their Pīr Sadr-ud-dīn seems a translation of the title Thakkar or Thākūr by which Lohānas are addressed. In support of this it is to be noticed that in Hālar or north-east Kāthiāwāda Khojāhs are still addressed by the Lohāna title of Thakkar and wear their waistcloths in Lohāna fashion. Further the language of the Khojāhs and of some of their Sindhi religious hymns contains a liberal mixture of Panjābi words which are also present in the language of the Kāthiāwāda Lohānās.

A later element of strength in the Khojāh community is of Kashmir origin. Farishtah¹ mentions the Chāks, originally a race of sun-worshippers, who called themselves Raushanias The People of Light. During the reign of Fateh-shāh of Kashmir (A.D. 1458-59, H. 861) these Chāks were converted to the Ismaili faith by a missionary from Irāk. This was Shams-ud-dīn, the second Ismaili missionary to India who according to the Khojāh hymns was able to work miracles.² Shams-ud-dīn settled at Ūch in Bahāwalpur about eighty miles south of Multān where his shrine still exists.³ The followers of Shams-ud-dīn number about 75,000 in the Panjāb and Kashmir. Many of his hoi (porter) Sonār (goldsmith) and Kasāra (coppersmith) converts, though still believing in him, have gone back to Hinduism, and many who never ceased to be Hindus continue to believe in him. According to the Khojāh accounts Shams-ud-dīn is the disciple of Nūr-Satāgur whom Shams served under the name of Chote. Farishtah gives A.D. 1496 as the date of Shams Chote's arrival in Kashmir.⁴

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khojāhs.

was in agreement with the Sūfi (tasawwuf) rule as laid down by Sīdī (A.D. 1234)

Su idiya gar veat khali Sukh Van La kh is o am;
Et Mazahidin, Allah, Allah; Et Hunghden Rām Rām.
Sādī, If thou wishest union
Live at peace with low and high,
With the Muslim call on Allah,
With the Hindu Rām Rām cry.

¹ Persian Text, II. 617.

² Farishtah notices that he met with elders of the Nūr Baksh order in Badakhshān. He found they differed in no way from the orthodox either in appearance or in ostensibly following the rules of the Sunnah or tradition. He says a son of Nūr Baksh showed him Nūr Baksh's hook, in which he found much to admire. Farishtah Pers. Text, II. 613.

³ One of the most famous of Shams Chote's miracles was the calling to life of the dead son of a powerful noble of Ūch. The Pīr said: In the name of Allah thou that art dead arise! The corpse did not stir. Then Shams-ud-dīn said: In the name of Shams thou that art dead arise! and the boy drew up and stretched out his hands and feet, yawned, sneezed, and was one of the living. Farishtah (Pers. Text, II. 613) seems to think that much of the success of Shams-ud-dīn in converting the Chāk sun-worshippers was due to the happy accident that the missionary's name was "Sun of the Faith" Shams-ud-dīn. ⁴ Major Biddulph's Tribes of the Hindu Kush, 121.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADEES,
Khoja's.

Sixty years earlier (about A.D. 1430) Sadr-ud-din known as the third Pir was appointed head of the Khojās of Kashmir Sindh and the Panjāb and was the first pir to found a khānah or Khojāh religious lodge. He conceived the idea of taking all the Khojāhs of India to visit the Unrevealed Imām in Persia. The huge army of pilgrims travelled till they reached Gujarāt in the Panjāb. At Gujarāt to test the faith of his headmen the Pir betook himself to the house of a prostitute seemingly forgetful of the sacred errand on which he had persuaded his followers to start. Two of the headmen lost faith in Sadr-ud-din. But Trikam the Sindh Mukhi, though vilely repulsed, satisfied the demands of the prostitute and took his Pir with him to the camp of the pilgrims. At the next encampment the faith of the followers was still more rudely tested. The Sindh headman alone passed the ordeal unscathed. In the end the Pir went alone to Alamūt. He saw the Imām incarnate, returned to Uch, died, and was buried at a village called Jetpūr near Uch.

As about A.D. 1200 Nūr-Satāgur had converted Gujarāt, so one of his successors Rāmdās originally a Tuwar Rajpūt, sowed the seed of the Ismāīliā faith in Kachh and Kāthiāwāḍ. About A.D. 1130, from the Ismāīliā lodge (khānah) he had established at Kotda in Sindh, Pir Sadr-ud-din started the first tythe-gathering wallet (jholi) on its rounds from the Himālayas to the Vindhya range. It was Pir Sadr-ud-din who to impart everlasting vigour to the tree of the Ismāīliā faith engrafted into it the name of Ali, and also the name of Agha Islām Shāh, an ancestor of His Highness the Agha Khān, as Ali's incarnation, together with the nine Avatārs of his Vishnu-worshipping followers. Up to Pir Sadr-ud-din's time Adam and the Prophet of Islām were unknown in the Hindu Pantheon. Adam is now introduced as Vishnu and the Prophet of Islām as Mahesh. Again as Islām Shāh was the incarnation of Ali so Nūr-Satāgur was the incarnation of the Prophet and Sadr-ud-din was the incarnation of Brahma. The last of the Imāms, the coming Mahdi, was explained to be the Niklanki or stainless Avatār, whose appearance was looked for by the Saktipanthis as the milenium.

After Sadr-ud-din came Kabīr-ud-din who was succeeded by Imām-ud-din known in Gujarāt as Imāmshāh. Imāmshāh was not well received by the Sindh Khojāhs and had to withdraw to Persia, where, after visiting the Imām at Kerkit, he returned to India in A.D. 1452. Disgusted with his Sindh followers he turned his footsteps towards Gujarāt and was favourably received by Mahmūd Begada (A.D. 1459 - 1511). Imām-ud-din founded a new sect in Gujarāt with opinions differing in some minor points from the doctrines of the Ismāīliā faith. The Khojāhs possess to this day a hymn composed by Imāmshāh called the Janāzah or Bier in which he describes his journey to the heavens through the power of the Imām, and his meeting with Pralhāda, Harisheandra, Yudhisthira, Sadr-ud-din, and others. Imāmshāh died in A.D. 1512. His disciples who belong to the class of Momnās are to be found in Ahmedābād, Kheda, Cambay, Baroda, Bhāvnagar, Surat, Khāndesh, and Kachh. Owing to the deviation of his teaching from the doctrines laid down by the older Khojāh Pirs, and owing to his denouncing the Khojāh practice of levying dassondh or tythes, Imāmshāh was excommunicated by Abdas-salām the son of Islāmshāh, the unrevealed Khojāh Imām of the time. In Gujārāt after the death of Pīr Imām-ud-dīn (A.D. 1512) active proselytizing ceased. About A.D. 1591 Kapūra Lohāna and some other Khojāhs carried the tythe wallet of the Indian Ismāīliās to Kekht in Persia the residence of Agha Abd-us-Salām the unrevealed Imām. To supply the want of a missionary Agha Abd-us-Salām wrote in Persian for the guidance of his Indian followers a book called the Pandiyād-i-Jawān-mardī that is the Maxims of Fortitude. This book trans-literated and translated into Sindhi and Gujarati forms part of the scriptures of the Khojāhs and is regarded with a veneration which gives the book the twenty-sixth place in the list of the Khojāh Pīrs or saints. The mystic strain in their faith the Khojāhs trace to certain allegorical traditions of the Prophet and Ali.¹

About the middle of the sixteenth century the backsliding of the Panjāb Khojāhs to Sunnism showed the need of a vice-pontiff in India. The Imām summoned one Dādū or Dādu, a descendant of a powerful family of Sindhi Khojāhs, and invested him with the mantle of a Pīr. The day of Dādū's investiture is still celebrated by the Khojāhs as the Shāh's Id. About A.D. 1549 (Samvat 1606) Pīr Dādū, owing to the hostility of the Samirās, left Sindh and settled in Jānuagar. Here they were honourably received by the Jām and at his request forty more families of Khojāhs were invited. A plot of land near the town was assigned to them and round it they raised a wall one of whose gates is still known as Dādū's Gate. After converting some Kāthiāvādī Lohānās Dādū went to Bhuj the capital of Kutch in the reign of Rāo Bhīrmal I. (A.D. 1585-1631). Here a rain-compelling miracle procured the Pīr many converts. Pīr Dādū died in A.D. 1594 and was succeeded by his son Sādik after whom the title of Pīrshīp became extinct, the deputy of the Imām being henceforth styled Vakil. Owing to family dissensions Sādik's grandson moved from Bhuj to Hāhār in Kāthiāvādī. In A.D. 1814 the Khojāh Imām Agha Shāh Hasan Ali discontinuing the appointment of local Khojāhs as his Vakil sent out his nephew to Kutch as his deputy. A year later (A.D. 1815) Agha Shāh Hasan Ali better known as His Highness the Agha-Khān, himself came to India and was the first Ismāīli unrevealed Imām to settle in this country. He was eighteenth in descent from Ruknuddin Khur Shāh during whose tenure of the Ismāīli pontificate, in A.D. 1255, Hālāku Khān the Tartar massacred the Ismāīli population of Persia, and dismantled their forts.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khojāhs.

¹ All being asked how he came to know Allah, replied: I came to know my Master from the weakness of my own purpose. In justification of their belief in incarnations the Khojāhs put forward the argument about Galla ad in Van furnished by a tradition which they attribute to the Prophet: I am the 'Alī'—he is Muhammad. This is Ahad the One and Unique Allah. (That is, without its three or more Muhammad became Ahad.) A scollar asked Ali: What is Allah? The Prince of the Faithful replied: Hast thou been at sea in a sinking ship? Though the wind sang thy dirge and the waves threatened to engulf thee, like the scurrying black and grey of Jehanna, even thou didst not shrill a loud voice: 'witness to thee! Thou shalt be saved!' That voice, oh thou of little belief, was Allah! The Khojāhs are fond of the Prophet's saying: Think not on the being, think on the bounty of God. Khojāh Vratant, 1-10.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khoja'hs.
Appearance.

In a large crowd of Musalmáns the Khojáh can be recognized by his full arched head, his massive square forehead, his heavy, sometimes bushy, but generally broadly pencilled and arched eyebrows and long full lashes fringing large keen brown or black eyes, his large roundish and sometimes forwardbent ears, his heavy moustaches falling over his small full lips without regard to the order and practice (sunnah) of the Prophet, his thick beard either shaved or cropped close to the skin covering a full chin and oval cheeks. Ages of business habit have given his face a good-tempered but keenly intelligent shrewdly confident and sometimes among the lower orders a hard and sinister expression. Among Khojáh women large dark sometimes flashing eyes often adorn a face which is pleasing and perfect in its oval outline. The other features though finer and more delicate are as clearly marked as those of the men. The complexion of the men varies from a yellowish or ruddyish fair to a rich olive or leonine brown, that of the women from a delicate fair to the greenish hue so highly prized and so often sung by the Persian and Urdu poet as the sabzah or green hue. The men are generally of medium height and well built with a tendency to stoutness, the women are below the medium height and rather slightly though symmetrically formed. The men shave their head or wear short close-cut hair in European style. The women wear their long black hair parted in the middle and drawn back hanging in a long plait. Khojáh women are fond of reddening their palms and soles with henna. They also apply lampblack or collyrium to the edges of their eyelids, but unlike other Musalmán women they are not partial to the missi or black dentrifice.¹

Dress.

Fifty years ago (A.D. 1840) the dress of the Khojáh men was the pahág or loosely wound white turban, the angarkha (literally body-coverer) or chola made of white cotton stuff fastened in front high over the chest by a pair of cotton ties or bands and falling to the ankles. The coat had sleeves of an extravagant length which were shortened by being creased up as far as the elbows. The coat of poorer men was the bandi or jacket cut like a chola, but reaching only as far as the waist. The lower extremities were covered by the suththan or chona a pair of trousers of thick white cotton cloth loose above and tightened at the ankles by a pair of loops and buttons. Those wearing the bandi had to wear over it fastened at the navel by a single knot a waist-cloth potio, while the wearer of the longer coat used to carry his waistcloth over his arm or shoulder. The shoes worn both by the rich and poor were pointed and of red or black leather. The indoor dress of the early Khojáh was a simple potio or waistcloth worn

¹ The origin of the use of missi (from mis, Arabic copper, because copper filings form one of its chief components) is the Arab admiration of the rich red of the inner lips called in Arabic luma. So in the Thousand and One Nights (Alf Leilah-wa Leilah), Arabic Text, Night 335 (Cairo Edition):—

As rimru ft laun il lund
Wal biro ft laun il batok.

Pleasing as the deep scarlet in the deep red of the inner lip,
Hateful as the whiteness in the whiteness of lip-detriction.

in the present Hindu style, with the rest of the body bare. The dress of the Khojáh women of fifty years ago was a striped silk or cotton bodice, fastened tightly behind in the middle of the back, a striped black green or red heavy petticoat with numerous folds reaching to the ankles and a scarf of green black or other sober cotton with borders and stripes called pachedi or potara. The dress of the modern rich Khojáh indoors is a skullcap of some sober hue of flowered or plain velvet or satin, a flannel or cashmere waistcoat in the cold weather or a cotton or silk waistcoat in the warm weather, the collar of the waistcoat being cut in the style of an English shirt, and below it a long fine white cotton shirt. Under the shirt a rich Khojáh wears a white cotton flannel or cashmere trousers either wholly in English style or cut in English style but fastened by a trousers string. Some Khojáhs wear white silk trousers but these are fast disappearing. On his feet the Khojáh wears white cotton or wool or silk stockings with a pair of velvet or leather slippers. Out of doors the rich Khojáh puts on a goldbordered arched turban which he calls a Mughláí phenta or Mughal scarf-turban, its shape being borrowed from the headdress of the Mughals. The peculiarity of the Khojáh turban is that it is smaller and lays bare a greater portion of the back of the head than the Meman or Kokani turban of the same shape. Another material used by Khojáhs for their turbans is the Calcutta needlework called kashidah. Old men or men with less taste for show wear silk embroidered turbans as also do the middle classes. The poor go out in their skullcaps. The rich and middle class Khojáh when going out of doors puts over his jacket or waistcoat a longer coat, a compromise between the English coat and Indian, having the length of the angarkha with the cut the buttons and the sleeves of an English coat. Some Khojáhs wear the sháyáh sadriyáh or Arab short coat open at the breast with a large row of silk buttons on one side and of loops on the other side. He changes his slippers for English boots, or, if he belongs to the middle classes, for country-made boots or shoes of English style. But for his arched gold or silk embroidered turban, the outdoor dress of the Khojáh is so similar to that of the modern Pársi that it would be difficult to distinguish a Khojáh from a Pársi. Except that it is made of cheaper materials, the dress of a middle class Khojáh does not differ from that of his rich fellow-tribesman. As has been observed the indoor dress of a middle class or rich Khojáh is the outdoor dress of the poor Khojáh. It is also made of poorer materials.

The wardrobe of Khojáh women is costly being made mostly of light coloured silks with silk or gold embroidery. A great part of a Khojáh married woman's wardrobe is a gift to her from her parents at the time of her marriage and is carefully kept the enduring materials of which it is composed last ten to twenty years. The indoor dress of a rich Khojáh woman consists of a plain or embroidered scarf pachedi, a goldbordered or plain silk or brocade kánoheri or bodice tightly laced at the back, a loose gown-like silk shirt or perahan reaching to the knees, and a pair of loose silk trousers izára. Out of doors she puts on a waistcoat (without sleeves or a polka

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADEES.
Khojáhs.
Dress.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khoja'hs.

with sleeves) a pair of stockings and slippers or English shoes. The dress of the children is like that of their parents except that until she reaches mature age, the Khojáh girl like the Pársi girl wears an embroidered skullcap. The dress of middle class and poor Khojáh women though of less costly materials is the same as that of the rich women.¹

Some Kachh Káthiáwáda and north Gujarát Khojáh men wear earrings in the lobes of the ears and jewelled studs in the ear cartilage. The practice is every day becoming less common. The other ornaments worn by Khojáh men are rings and watch chains. The ornaments worn by the women though differing in name and slightly in some cases in appearance are the same as those worn by Sunni women.

Character.

The Khojáh enjoys a good business reputation. A Pársi would rather trust a Khojáh than a Meman. A keen jealous spirit of competition is the chief trait in the Khojáh character. The Khojáh is a good hater Vedmen Khojo, Dukhmen sojo: For hate a Khojáh, for pain a boil. The Khojáh expresses his contempt for an upstart rival by the term Tre pēnjyo A three-twenty-five that is a man who fancies himself wealthy because he owns three times twenty-five rupees. Though called Tundās that is beliefless epicures the Khojáh's have a great regard for their religion the tenets of which they observe faithfully.² They are neat, clean, sober, thrifty, ambitious, and in trade enterprising and cool and resourceful. They are great travellers by land and sea visiting and settling in distant countries for purposes of trade. They have business connections with the Panjáb, Sindh, Calcutta, Ceylon, Burma, Singápur, China, and Japan; with ports of the Persian Gulf Arabia and East Africa, and with England America and Australia. Khojáh boys go as apprentices in foreign Khojáh firms on salaries of Rs. 200 to Rs. 2000 a year with board and lodging.

Calling.

On their first settlement in the towns of Gujarát the Khojáh's were parched-grainsellers, fuel-sellers, old-embroiderymen (zaripuránds), and bricklayers. They now enjoy assured and powerful positions in the ivory, horn, cotton, hide, mother-of-pearl, grain, spice, fishmaw, shark-fin, cotton, seed, furniture, opium, and silk trades. They have also gained high places in the learned professions as doctors engineers and lawyers. A Khojáh has lately (A.D. 1897) been elected a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council.

Customs.

Khojáh's have many observances and customs differing from those of regular Musalmáns. The chhatti or sixth day ceremony after birth differs from that performed by regular Gujarát Musalmáns. Near the bed of the mother is placed a bijol or wooden stool on which after the child and mother have been bathed and dressed, on the evening of the sixth day are placed a reedpen an inkstand a blank book a knife and a garland of flowers. The pen ink and paper are intended for the Goddess of Fortune who is believed to write the destiny of the newborn child. A chaumukh four-sided butter-fed dough-lamp is also placed on the stool and lighted and close to the lamp is set a box of Chinese crackers. As each of the female relatives of the family comes in she strews a little rice near the stool, lays on the ground her present of gold or silver wristlets and anklets for the child and bending over the mother and her newborn babe takes their balāyeñ or ills upon herself by passing her hands over them and crackling her finger-joints against her temples. The little one is then laid on the ground on the strewn rice and the mother rises and worships the child by bowing towards it and to the chaumukh or four-faced lamp on the stool. Crackers are then let off and the child is laid in its mother's lap.

¹ The chief difference is that none but the rich wear either the likit that is locked round the neck, a fashion adopted by Khojáh women from Pársi women, or the Lodi Laskar, a gold or silver knob set in a capacious hole in the lobe of the ear, which the rich and middle class are gradually giving up.

² Mr. Háshimbhái Núr Muhammad of Bombay.

The Khojāh marriage keeps a relic of the marriage by purchase which they believe once obtained among them. Three or four days before the marriage the father or male guardian of the marrying pair meet one evening at the Jamā-āt Khanāh or assembly lodge with their friends and relatives and the Mukhi or other Jamā-āt officer. The officer registers the names of the bride and bridegroom in a register kept under the order of His Highness the Aghā Khān. The father of the bridegroom gives Rs. 5½ to the father of the bride. The sum is received by the girl's father and handed to the Jamā-āt officer as the marriage contribution to the funds. The bridegroom's friends place before the Jamā-āt officer a copper or brass tray containing from five to ten seers of sugar. The Jamā-āt officer, after repeating the hallowed names of the Five or Panj-tan that is Muhammad, Ali, Fātimah, Hasan, and Hussein declares : I do hereby begin the wedding of Mehr Ali, son of Karam Ali, with Rabiāh, the fourth daughter of Padamsi Pūnja, to wed as did wed Fātimah, the brightfaced lady daughter of our Lord and Prophet Muhammad (on whom be peace !) with the lord and the leader, the receiver of the testament of the Chosen and Pure, the lord Ali, the son of Abū Tālib. The sugar tray is then placed before the bride's father who in token of ratifying the compact tastes a pinch of the sugar which is then distributed among those present. This is the verbal compact.

On the morning of the next day the written agreement is prepared. A thick parchment-like sheet of blank paper is taken together with trays full of dried fruit and sugar to the bride's house by the bridegroom's father and his friends accompanied by the Jamā-āt officers. The Jamā-āt scribe begins the writing with the names of the five holy persons and the names of the four archangels in the four corners. Then are entered the names of the contracting parties with those of their fathers and grandfathers, the amount of the marriage portion, the names of the chief Jamā-āt officers of the day, and the dates on which the chief marriage ceremonies are to be performed. Saffron water is sprinkled over the sheet of paper, which, together with the sugar and dried fruit, is laid before the bridegroom's father. The bridegroom's father lays the sheet on the ground and, on it places an iron nail and four betelnuts and throws some rice over it. Then folding it he wraps it and the betelnuts in an unused silk or cotton handkerchief and takes it away. Except that in Bombay the Nikāh ceremony is performed

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khoja's.
Customs.

Marriage.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khoja's.
Customs.
Death.

by His Highness the Aghá Khán himself and outside Bombay by his officers the ceremonies that follow possess no noteworthy peculiarity.

A remarkable feature at a Khojáh's death is the samarehkhántá or Holy Drop. The Jamá-át officer or the Mukhi asks the dying Khojáh if he wishes the sacred drop samarehkhántá. If the dying person agrees he or she bequeaths Rs. 5 to Rs. 500 or any larger amount to the Khojáh Jamá-át. A Sindhi-knowing Khojáh is then called in to read the Book of the Ten Incarnations Das-Avatár. A Jamá-át officer dilutes a cake of Karbalá clay in water, and, to save the departing soul from the temptation of the Archfiend who is believed to be present offering a cup of false nectar, moistens the lips and sprinkles the rest of the water on the face the neck and the chest of the dying Khojáh. The touch of the Holy Drop is believed to relieve the death agony as completely as among the Sunnis does the recital at a death-bed of the chapter of the Kuraán known as the Súrah-i-Yá-sín. If the dead is old and grayhaired the hair after death is dyed with henna. A garland of cakes of Karbalá clay is tied round the neck of the corpse. If the body is to be buried locally two small circular patches of silk cloth cut from the covering of Husain's tomb, called chashmahs or spectacles, are laid over the eyes. If the body is to be buried in the sacred soil of Karbalá the viscera are removed before the body is bathed, the hollow is filled with camphor and the incision carefully sewn.¹ After it is bathed and shrouded, the body is laid in a bier and taken to a mosque and the prayers for the dead are repeated over it. It is then placed in an air-tight tin-lined coffin which is afterwards enveloped in tarred canvas. As long as the coffin lies at a mosque awaiting shipment the services of a Shiáh Mulláh are engaged at Rs. 5 to Rs. 50 to keep on reading the Kuraán over the body. The coffins of dead Khojáhs are carried by the Persian Steam Navigation Company's steamers and transhipped at the mouth of the Euphrates into smaller river-steamers and by them are landed at Baghdád ten or twelve days after leaving Bombay. At Baghdád professional coffin-carriers take charge of them and carry the coffins by mulo or camel to Karbalá. The steamer freights vary from Rs. 200 to Rs. 400: the Baghdád camelmen charge no less than Rs. 20 to Rs. 40 for each coffin; and the final interment charges at Karbalá are heavy ranging from Rs. 100 for the deposit of the coffin in the vaults (Sardáb) below Husain's shrine to Rs. 2000 to Rs. 5000 for a grave on the Karbalá side.

Religion.

The religion of the Khojáhs is Shiáh Ismáíliásm. To the simple Sunni Kalimah or profession of faith "There is no God but Alláh and Muhammad is His Prophet" the Shiáh adds "and Ali the companion of Muhammad is the Vicar of God." The elevation of Ali to an almost equal place with the Prophet is the distinctive tenet of the Shiâhs.¹ The whole religious life of the Shiâh is steeped in a current of thoughts beliefs traditions and observances having their source in Ali, the Lady Fâtimah, and their two sons Hasan and Husain, four venerated names which with that of the apostle of God compose the Pentad or Panj-tan of the holy family of Islâm. To revere Ali as the Vicar, still more as the incarnation of Allâh, to go on pilgrimage to Shâh Najaf the supposed place of Ali's martyrdom 120 miles south-west of Baghdâd, and at Karbâlâ to bow the forehead on mounds of Karbâlâ clay and to drink the holy clay dissolved in water are practices as meritorious in the eyes of the Shiâh as they are forbidden in the estimation of the Sunni. The Sunni prays with folded arms five times, the Shiâh with his arms straight by his side three times a day. The Shiâh venerates Ali and Fâtimah and execrates the memory of the first three Khalîfahs. The Sunni reverences the first three Khalîfahs equally with Ali and the Lady Fâtimah. The Shiâh laws of marriage divorce and inheritance, though drawn from the same source, are completely opposed to the Sunni laws. The Khojâhs, like the Memans, follow the Hindu law of inheritance.²

¹ This is doubtful. Some say the Shiáh in common with orthodox sections believe that it is sacrilege amounting to a mutilation of the defunct to even handle the body roughly after death. They say that the viscera are not removed, but that a stout cotton ribbon about two inches in breadth is wound tightly and closely round the body of the corpse beginning from the toes and ending at the throat. After the body is deposited in the coffin the remaining space in the coffin is filled with finely pounded henna powder. The powdered henna absorbs all the moisture which the body exudes and prevents smell.

The Sunni considers it his duty, if he can afford it, to make a pilgrimage to Makkah and Madînah. With the Shiâh it is an act of merit if he has visited the shrines of Ali and Husain.³

The Ismâîlia Shiâhs are divided into two classes, the Isna-asharis or Twelvers who believe in the twelve Imâms, the descendants of Ali. To this branch of the Shiâh faith belong the regular classes of the Persian and Indian Shiâhs. The other branch is that of the Seveners or Sabîtis who are called Ismâîlians because they reckon seven Imâms and make Ismâîl, the son of Muhammad, the son of Jaâfar Sâdik, the last of the revealed Imâms. The difference between the Twelvers and the Seveners starts from the seventh Imâm. The power of the Seveners originated with the dynasty of the Fâtimis in Egypt (A.D. 910 - 1171) founded by Obeidullah (A.D. 910) who through

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khojâhs,
Religion.

¹ Etymologically Shiâh means separatist which is probably the correct derivation. The term was originally applied to those pure-blooded members of Ali's family who fell early victims to the hostility of the Sunni Umayyad Khalîfahs of Damascus (A.D. 661 - 745). Sir Joseph Arnould in the Great Khojâh Case of 1866.

² During the absence of His Highness the Aghâ in Calcutta in A.D. 1846-47 and 1848 litigation was carried on and concluded which again divided the Khojâhs of Bombay into two hostile parties. It was the well-known case as to the rights of female inheritance among the Khojâhs, called Sarjun Mir-Ali's case, in which Sir Erskine Perry in A.D. 1847 pronounced a learned judgment, founded on the evidence of caste-usage and custom, against the rights of Khojâh females to inherit according to the rules of Muhammadan law. The Great Khojâh Case of 1866.

³ Sir Joseph Arnould, on whose judgment in the great Khojâh case of A.D. 1866 much of the above contrast is based, thus sums the differences: In a word, agreeing in reverencing Muhammad as the Prophet and the Kuran as the word of Allâh, the Sunnis and Shiâhs agree in little else except in hating each other with the bitterest hatred. (The Great Khojâh Case.) The Shiâh calls the Sunni a Nâsibi and a Kharîji, a usurper and an outgoer. The Sunni retorts by calling the Shiâh a Râfizi or seceder. Sir Richard Burton (Alf Lailah wa Lailah, IV. 44 note 1) says: The Shiâhs have no ground to feel offended at the word Râfizi being applied to them as the name was taken from their own saying inna rafadûna hum Verily we have rejected or renounced them, that is the first three Khalîfahs.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khoja'ns.
Religion.

Muhammad Habīb, the son of Jaāfar Musaddik, who claimed descent from Ismā'īl, the seventh and according to the Ismā'īlīs the last of the revealed Imāms. Muhammad, the son of Ismā'īl and his son Jaāfar Musaddik and his son Muhammad Habīb are called by the Ismā'īlīs their Māktūm or Concealed Imāms in contradistinction to Obeidullah the asserter of the rights of the family of Ismā'īl to the Khilāfat, a Revealed Imām. On the establishment of the Fātimite dynasty in Africa (A.D. 910) the Ismā'īlīa doctrines were first publicly taught at Mahdia, a city founded by Obeidullāh afterwards surnamed Al Mahdi, and after the conquest of Egypt, by the fourth Fātimite Al Muizz (A.D. 953-975) at Cairo. Towards the close of the eleventh century (A.D. 1072-1092) the power of the Ismā'īlīs was established at Alamūt in Persia by Hasan Sabāh. The doctrines of the Ismā'īlīs of Persia remained without change till the year A.D. 1163 when the fourth successor of Hasan Sabāh, Ālā-zikrī-his-salām, abrogated the rule of secrecy and promulgated his doctrines and transferred the Imāmate from the Fātimite to himself.¹ From Ālāzīkri-his-salām the Khojāhs derive the succession and descent of their present Imām Agha Sultān Muhammad Shāh. In order to present the Ismā'īlīa faith in inviting form to the Shakti-worshipping Lohānas the first Ismā'īlīa missionaries made some modification in its doctrines. The Mahdi or unrevealed Imām of Alamūt was preached to the Shaktipanthīs as their looked-for tenth incarnation the Niklaunkī or Stainless Avatār. The five Pāndavas were the first five famous Ismā'īlīa pontiffs. The first Ismā'īlīa missionary Nūr Satgūr (A.D. 1163) was the incarnation of Brahma that appeared on earth next after Buddha. Among the Mātāpantīs each of the four Yūgās or epochs has its preacher or bhakta. To the first epoch is assigned as bhakta Pralhādha, to the second Harischandra, and to the third Yudishthira. Instead of the fourth Balibhadra, Pīr Sadr-ud-dīn the third Khojāh missionary added his own name. The four sacrifices² of the four jugas were confirmed as were also confirmed the Ghat Pāth-Mantra or prayer and ritual of the Shaktipanthīs. Instead of Shaktipanth Sadr-ud-dīn adopted the name of Satpanth or True Doctrine for his new faith. The Khojāhs repeat the hymns of Sadr-ud-dīn with great devotion and never name him but with extreme reverence. The forms of Khojāh prayer and ritual are laid down in the Book of Pandyādi Jawān Mardī by Agha Abdus Salām Shāh one of the Khojāh Imāms. The book is translated into old Hindu Sindhi. Before the time of Pīr Dādu (about A.D. 1550) the form of worship prescribed to the Khojāhs was daily attendance at the khānah or prayer-lodge and the repetition on a rosary of 99 or 101 beads the names Pīr-Shāh or Shāh Pīr.³ Pīr Dādu ordered his followers to pray three times a day like the Shiāhs repeating the above words in their prayer and also repeating the names of all the Imāms down to the present Imām. The Khojāh prays sitting mentally addressing his prayers to the Imām for the time. He also makes prostrations at stated intervals. The newmoon, Muharram,

¹ Von Haumer's Assassins, 20-109.

² The Balihāns, the first Yuzā sacrifice being the elephant, the second the horse, the third the cow, the fourth the goat. Khojāh Variant, 125.

³ Shāh, literally King, allegorically means God and Pīr the Prophet. Khojāh Variant, 239-40.

and Ramazán prayers are repeated in the Jamá-át Khánah with the Pír as Leader. While the prayer reciters are assembling a man stands at the chief entrance to the Jamá-át Khánah. He demands the Khojáh shibboleth or watchword of every person seeking admission. The newcomer says: Hai Zindah Oh thou living one, and the Janitor answers Káyámpáya I have found him alive and true.¹ The Khojáh's three daily prayers are: Morning prayer Subo-ji nimáz between 4 and 5 A.M.; evening prayer Maghrib or Sámanji nimáz at dusk; and night prayer Isáji nimáz between 8 and 9 P.M. generally at home. Next to prayer the most important act of devotion is the counting of the names of the pírs on a rosary of 101 beads made of Karbálá clay. Third in importance is the Khojáh sacrament the Ghat pát or Heart-prayer. Except on holidays Saturdays and Mondays, when in Bombay the Imám presides, the sacrament is held after the morning prayers at the chief Jamá-át Khánah by the Jamá-át officers. Karbálá clay is dissolved in a large bowl of water, and as each of the congregation rises to leave the lodge he goes to the person presiding lays before him from 2 annas to 2 rupees and kisses his hand. He receives a small cup of the sacramental water which he drinks and retires.

Besides the Dassondh or tithe and the Petondh, a smaller contribution, the Khojáh has to pay his Imám about sixteen minor contributions varying from $\frac{1}{4}$ -5 annas to Rs. 1000.² These he pays as the sakát or purification ordered by the Kuráan. Besides these when pressed for money the Imám sends round the jholi or wallet demanding an extraordinary levy of the tenth or fifth part of the whole of a Khojáh's possessions. This is called the Bakkas a corruption of bakhshish or voluntary gift. Though it once caused the defection of a large number from the community the Khojáhs have more than once cheerfully paid the Bakkas. The date of its last payment was A.D. 1839-40.³ The Dassondh is levied on each newmoon day of every month, each Khojáh dropping into a cloth bag kept in the Jamá-át Khánah for the purpose as much as he is inclined to pay generally the tenth part of his monthly earnings. The Kánga is the contribution due for the initiation of a Khojáh child. It is paid by the parents at any time after the child has reached the age of four to twelve. This is the Khojáh substitute for the Bismillah ceremony of the Regular Musalmáns.

Besides the Ramazán and the Bakr Íds, two holidays which they

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Khojáhs.
Religion.

Taxes.

Holidays.

¹ It is said that Pír Kabir-ud-dín, the fourth Ismáíli missionary (A.D. 1449) in one of his visits to the Imám at Deilam, was addressed by the Imám as Hai zindah! Oh living one. In reply the Pír said Káyámpáya I have found him alive (meaning himself). These words repeated in a Khojáh's devotions possess a merit equal to the gift of a horse in charity. Khojáh Vratánt, 212.

² The Khojáh Vratánt at page 214 gives the names of some of the chief dues as: 1 Sarsár, 2 Lekho, 3 Chokho, 4 Chopdo, 5 Samar-akháto, 6 Marnu-parani, 7 Chándránt-piráni, 8 Bhakti-bhuki, 9 Darya Dakas, 10 Chhatti-mándá, 11 Gulfúl, 12 Phodn-phodi, 13 Matta-salamati, 14 Mohur, 15 Sadamaji, 16 Kango. The Dassondh and Petondh though large dues are not regularly paid. Many Khojáhs do not pay them at all. Mr. Háshimbháí Núr Mahamud.

³ Sir Joseph Arnould's Judgment in the Great Khojáh Case of 1860 page 11.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.

enjoy jointly with other Musalmáns, the Khojáhs observe nine other yearly holidays.¹

Memans, properly Muámíns or Believers, include five divisions of Kachhis from Sindh and Kachh, Háláris from Hálár in north-east Káthiáwáda, Dhokas belonging to Dholka in Ahmedábád, Dhoráji Bhávnagris from Bhávnagar in south-east Káthiáwáda, and Verávádas from Verával in south Káthiáwáda. Their descent from converts of two distinct Hindn-Sindh and Kachh castes, the trading Loháns and the market gardening Káchhiás of Káthiáwáda, is perpetuated by the two main divisions of Kachhis and Háláris, from the latter of which the Dhokas Bhávnagris and Verávádas are offshoots.

History.

Maulána Abdul Kádir Muhi-yud-dín Gílání the Saint of Saints died at Baghdád in A.D. 1165 (H. 561). On his death-bed he ordered one of his sons Táj-ud-dín to settle in India and display to its people the light of Islám.² In A.D. 1421 (H. 838) Sayad Eúsuf-ud-dín Kádírí, fifth in descent from Táj-ud-dín, was in a miraculous dream ordered to set sail for Sindh and guide its people into the right way of Islám. When Sayad Eúsuf-ud-dín reached Sindh, its capital was Nagar-Thatha and its ruler was a chief of the Samma dynasty (A.D. 1351-1521) with the title of Markab Khán³ (probably Jám Rái Dán [A.D. 1454]) who received Sayad Eúsuf-ud-dín with honour and entertained him as his guest. At this time Mánekji, the head of the eighty-four nukhs or divisions of the Lohána community⁴ was in favour at the court of

¹ The details are :

Katl Assassination of the Imám Ali	21st Ramazán.
Lailat-ul-Kadr Night of pre-ordainment of Destinies	23rd ditto.
I'd-i-Ghulár	18th Zil Hajjah.
Ashurah	9th and 10th Moharram.
Chithlum	21st of Safar.
Katl-i (Assassination of) Imám Hasan	29th ditto.
I'd-i-Maulad Hussein's Birthday	17th of the 1st Rabi.
The Nauruz or Vernal Equinox kept according to the Parsi calculation	21st March.
Birthday of His Highness Ágha Khán	Fálgun Sun 6th, 25th Mar.

² From an Urdu treatise named Nuzhat-ul-Akhlár by Sayal Amír-ud-dín Nuzhat written under the patronage of the Meman spiritual guide Pír Bazurg Ali of Mundra in Kachh in A.D. 1873 (H. 1290). This account, though unreliable as to dates, is said to be derived from three respectable sources: First the pedigree of the holy Sayad Bazurg Ali. Second, sanads or patents of the headship of the community conferred on Manekji the first Lohána convert to Islám in the possession of Seth Síhebna of Bhuj, Mánekji's descendant in Bombay. Third, sanads or patents in the possession of Joshi Bhojaji, a descendant of Joshi Mansráj, son of Ramáji, the caste priest of the Loháns at the time of their conversion.

³ Farishtah (Persian Text, II. 615-620) in his notice of the Sammas of Sindh does not mention any individual of the name of Markab Khán as having ruled over Sindh. The Tárkh-i-Másumi, A.D. 1600 (Elliot, I. 231) mentions a salár who was a man of judgment and was considered a saint at Thatha, as in the habit of visiting the Samma ruler Jám Rái Dán (A.D. 1454) and as much respected and favoured by that monarch. The nearness of this date (A.D. 1421) given to Sayad Eúsuf-ud-dín with the date (A.D. 1454) of Jám Rái Dán favours the supposition that by Markab Khán the author of the treatise meant Jám Rái Dán himself.

⁴ According to the Memans the name Lohána is from Lohánpur in Multán. This derivation is probably correct. The Khojáhs (Above page 39) say Lohána is from Lohuragadh, probably Lahore, but the Khojáhs are sadly confused. According to Amír-ul-dín (page 13) in A.D. 1400 the Loháns were known in Sindh as Notas. The names of sixty of Markab Khán. Markab Khán became a follower of the Sayad and Mánekji with two of his three sons and 700 Lohána families followed their ruler's example. Of the two sons of Mánekji who became converts Ravji was called Ahmed and Ravji's sons Sundarji and Hansráj were named Adam and Táj Muhammad. On their conversion the saint changed the name of the community from Mota and Lohána to Muámin or Believers, and, investing Adam with a dress of honour, appointed him hereditary head of the new community with his seat at Wára near Thatba. The Hindu relatives of the converted Loháns called on their spiritual guides to pray to Darya Pir the Indus spirit to remove the saint.¹ The Indus spirit heard their prayer. The saint refused a grant of land and after receiving his followers' assurance that they would continue to support his descendants as their religious heads Eúsuf-ud-dín retired by sea to Irák. Before leaving he blessed his people, a blessing to which the Memans trace their fruitfulness and their success in trade. Pír Buzurg Ali Kádiri of Mundra in south Kachh who died nearly two years ago (A.D. 1896) was eighteenth in descent from Sayad Eúsuf-ud-dín. The present (A.D. 1898) Pír is his son Sayad Jaafar Sháh who lives partly in Bombay and partly in Mundra. According to this account at the invitation of the Jadeja Ráo Khengár (A.D. 1548-1584), under Kannawa a descendant of Adam Seth, the Memans moved from Thatba to Bhúj; and, under the favour of Ráo Khengár who honoured Kannawa with the title of Seth, founded the Meman ward of that city. At an uncertain date the Lohána or Kachhi Memans passed from Kachh south through Káthiáváda to Gujarát. They are said to have been strong and wealthy in Surat during the period of its prosperity (A.D. 1580-1680). As Surat sank the Kachhi Memans moved to Bombay, the settlement receiving a large increase in consequence of the sufferings caused in north Gujarát and Kachh by the A.D. 1813 famine. As Káthiáváda did not suffer less than Kachh from the famine of A.D. 1813, many Káthiáváda Memans from Halár and Bhávnagar migrated to different parts of Gujarát, chiefly to the north Gujarát states and Ahmedábád and also to Surat and Bombay. Besides what may be considered their homes in Kachh and Káthiáváda the Memans are scattered over the cities of north and south Gujarát. Beyond Gujarát Memans both of the Halár and of the Kachhi classes are found in Bombay Thána Násik and Khándesh. Beyond the Presidency Memans, almost entirely of the Kachh division, have spread as traders and merchants and formed settlements in Calcutta, Madras, the Malabar Coast, South Burma, Siám, Singápur, and Jáva; in the ports of the Arabian peninsula except Maskat where they have been

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.
History.

their eighty-four Nukhs or clans are: Aoddni, Aiyá, Ambiya, Asakirah, Adihakar, Bhatá, Barya, Ghakhar, Ghata, Ghadi, Ghadhar, Ganda, Gajan Mathya, Gulbadáda, Ohakha, Saja, Chandnani Ohochak, Ghideman Sakya, Chide, Aduputra, Chandan, Joban Putra, Jaysiyya, Karya, Khakhar, Khokharya, Khodra, Kayali, Kesarya, Katesra, Kotak, Khora, Loriya, Ladak, Majitya, Maanak, Medwar, Naram, Nudráni, Pibarya, Pálya, Pandhi, Pakharya, Padan, Phulbainda, Popat, Rach, Bakuwara, Raichanna, Rúna, Rúrya, Rokhana, Rúparel, Sakráni, Sabágar, Sándúwa, Somiya, Sondgila, Somisar, Thakrá, Tina, and Thaura.

¹ The Lohána priests who prayed to the Indus were Tekmal, Adhammal, Nandmal, and Mámal.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.
Appearance.

ousted by the Khojâhs; in Mozambique Zanzibâr and the East African Coast. The Jaddah Memans are mostly Kachhis. The Kachh Memans are a fair people, the men often with ruddy skins thick beards, profuse head and body-hair, large dark almond-shaped eyes with the full and arched eyebrows peculiar to Sindh. Somewhat above the middle height and inclined to fullness in youth and corpulence in middle age both men and women are remarkably well-formed and strong. The Kachh Meman's face is often round sometimes oval, with round cheeks, high forehead, a straight or slightly hooked nose with large well-turned nostrils, small full lips, round well marked chin generally dimpled in women, small ears, and an elongated neck set on square shoulders. The expression is keen, shrewd, self-reliant. They wear the moustache short according to the sunnah (tradition and practice) of the Prophet, and the beard about at the most six inches long, often, when a plentiful growth of its thick hair spreads over their cheeks divided by two shaven belts one on the cheek the other on the neck. Regardless of the law many of the younger men wear their hair short and parted in the middle, the moustache full, and the beard cropped close. Most of them however shave the head. Meman women who have often very long hair wear it parted down the middle in a plait of three braids ending in a ribbon. The elders both men and women try to disguise gray hair by dyeing it with henna (Lawsonia inermis) and sometimes with henna and indigo.¹ For a time the indigo dye is effective, but if the application is not renewed within eight days the roots of the hair turn a flaming purple. Both Meman men and women blacken their eyelids with collyrium kohl. From early girlhood Meman women redden their palms fingers and finger nails and their soles and toes with henna.² Black dentrifice is also used by married women.³ The Hâkî Memans are darker and smaller than the Kachhi Memans with whom they never marry. The features of the Hâkîs are not so marked as those of the Kachhis; neither are they so regular or pleasant. It is difficult to give a typical description of a Hâkî Meman.

Character.

In business both Kachhi and Hâkî Memans are shrewd and energetic, the Kachhis with perhaps the better name for fair dealing. Socially both communities are jovial pleasure-loving and hot-tempered; and are regarded by other Musalmâns as devout and charitable. A favourite form of Meman charity is to help poor pilgrims to Makkah, a generosity which sometimes goes the length of chartering a ship.⁴

¹ This is also a sunnah or traditionally meritorious act. The Prophet said: Change the whiteness of your hair, but not with anything black. (Mishkât-ul-Masâlih, 360-362.) The first Khalîfah Abû Bakr (A.D. 632-634) used to dye his beard red with henna. Among the regular Musalmâns who all use indigo dyes, the order is honoured in the breast.

² The practice of applying henna varies greatly. Many tinge only the finger nails and toes. Some make a stripe along the backs of their hands across the knuckles. The stain is a light orange, a deep scarlet, a dark red, and sometimes by long and frequent applications a dark much-admired olive.

³ The black dentrifice missi (Above page 42 note 1), together with the kohl and the henna are held in high respect, because they are sanctified as a toilet article by the Lady Fâtimah the Prophet's daughter. So far is this respect carried that when unwell Gujarât Musalmâns consider it sinful to use missi.

⁴ Fondness for secret charity is an honourable trait among rich Memans. The

In spite of the Sindhi strain in the Kachhi, and the Kāthiāvāḍa strain in the Hālāi, the speech of the Kachhi and Hālāi Memans is fundamentally the same. The speech of the Kachhi though based upon the Kachhi dialect has so many Hālāi words that the two classes understand each other with little difficulty.¹ Contact with Urdu speaking Musalmāns has given almost all Memans a colloquial knowledge of Urdu. Except a few who have a scholarly knowledge of Urdu the Meman accent and pronunciation of several words is generally incorrect.²

At present, except that the Kachhi outdoor dress is richer, Kachhi and Hālāi Memans wear the same kind of clothing. The original dress of the men was the Kachhi or Kāthiāvāḍa phāli or loose turban, a shirt, a jacket, trousers loose and bulging above and tight and sometimes buttoned below the knee, a white cotton silk or gold-bordered waist-cloth girt round the waist and hanging below the knee, and country-made slippers. The indoor dress was the shirt and trousers. The women dress in a robe worn over the head, the half-sleeved backless bodice and the black or navy-blue petticoat worn in the Kāthiāvāḍa style. The first changes in dress were effected after the mutinies (A.D. 1857) by their Sayyids and Maulavis who objected to Musalmān women leaving exposed those parts of their person which the law ordered should be covered. Under their influence the well-to-do gave up the Hindu dress and the poor followed the example of the rich. Among men the change of dress was more gradual. At first pilgrims from Makkah took to wearing the ammamah or small arched Arab turban, the shayāh or loose open overcoat, the long loose shirt, and tight sleeveless waistcoat. Except that the buttons were removed, the old ankle-long trousers were continued. For some years pilgrims alone were allowed to wear this Arab dress. But by degrees the new style came into almost universal use. Though Memans are fond of costly clothes neither men nor women show taste or neatness in dress. The men are fond of gold embroidery and the women of gay colours. The chief peculiarities in the present dress of the Meman is the shortness of their turbans which consists of a few coils of some light silk or shawl

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.

Dress.

Meman ideal of hidden generosity was the merchant Hāji Zakariyyah (A.D. 1823-1840) the founder of the Zakariyyah mosque in the street of that name in Bombay City. A learned and devout Maulavi from Mātwa lodging in the Zakariyyah mosque was conscious during the night that a bent old man rustled in a dirty sheet was shampooing him. The Maulavi prayed the old man to cease but he would not. The Maulavi fell asleep and in the morning found a twenty-rupee note under his bedding. As he failed to trace the giver, next night, when the old shampooer returned, the Maulavi feigned sleep and caught the old man's hand while placing a paper under his bedding. In the struggle the old man's sheet fell off revealing the honoured features of Hāji Zakariyyah who was abashed at being caught in an act of secret generosity. The paper enclosed a note for a hundred rupees. On the wrapper were the words: A tribute of respect for learning. Pray for the forgiveness of this humble instrument of Allāh's will.

¹ Among the differences in common words between Kachhi and Hālāi may be noted:

English.	Kachhi.	Hālāi.
Bekind.	Chāi.	Pathā.
Bend.	Fāi.	Chānpone.
Bring.	Fāthor.	Dāpā.

² For ghar house a Meman says gur, for ghali brother ghā, for ghāḍi rent bādo, and speaks Urdu with the Kachhi or Kāthiāvāḍa accent.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.
Dress.

or gold-embroidered material wound over a cool airy and light straw net-work cap, a recent importation from Jáva, or a white cotton-padded Arab skullcap. In the dress of the women the leading peculiarities are the shortness of the bodice sleeves, the looseness of the silk shirt, and the tightness at the ankle and looseness above the knees of the trousers, and the liberal use of gold beads and gold or silk embroidery in the shirt.

A rich Meman's indoor dress consists of a gold-embroidered or brocade skullcap, a long shirt of thin flowered or plain muslin fastened at the neck by three or four buttons kept together by a tiny gold chain, a tightfitting sleeveless waistcoat sadaryah of broadcloth velvet or cashmere in the cold and of white muslin or coloured silk in the hot weather, with, in front, a row of small silk buttons each with its corresponding loop, two long breast pockets and two shallow crescent-shaped waist pockets. From the long breast pocket or from between the looped fastenings peeps out a coloured silk handkerchief. The trousers are of a creamy lawn or longcloth, loose above and tight at the ankle, the edges braided. The elder and more religious wear the shorter legal trousers which end an inch or two above the ankle. Out of doors a few of the richer and younger men wear broadcloth trousers of uniform looseness reaching the ground in English fashion. Indoors except a few who wear English slippers and stockings the feet are bare. In going out a rich Meman draws over his indoor dress a sháyah sadaryah or over-waistcoat of the same material as the waistcoat, but unlike it rather loose and sleeved but with the skirts slit at the sides and often reaching lower than the knee. On the top of the upper waistcoat and of the same material the rich Meman draws the loose unbuttoned Arab gown or sháyah. He puts his feet into English shoes or red pointed country slippers. Except for its gold buttons and its collars, epaulettes, and gold or embroidered edges a rich Meman's ceremonial dress is the same as his usual outdoor dress. The headdress is the old arched Arab turban or a valuable Cashmere shawl: a full embroidered or gold-edged Banáras scarf dupatta, or, according to the latest fashion, a short scarf wound once or twice round a skullcap of embroidered broadcloth or silk, or, latest novelty of all, of China or Jáva straw. The middle class Meman's indoor and outdoor dress is less costly and is made of more lasting materials. He dispenses with the gown sháyah both on ceremonial and common occasions and sometimes, like the men of the lower middle and poor classes, goes out on pleasure and business in a skullcap with nothing over his waistcoat. On his feet he wears English boots or shoes and, as in the case of the very rich, stockings. A poor Meman wears a cotton or silk skullcap, a coarse longcloth or muslin shirt, a broadcloth silk or cashmere waistcoat and trousers of inferior longcloth or common gray shirting. Only on the I'd holidays and at marriages and public dinners does a poor Meman wear the turban or the over-waistcoat sháyah sadaryah. He generally wears country-made red shoes or pointed slippers.

A rich Meman woman wears the long loose half-sleeved silken chemise called aba of gay coloured Chinese or Indian silk fastened by two small buttons¹ on each side of the neck above the shoulders, embroidered at the breast and coloured with gold lace at the skirts and over the seams. The chemise is often of muslin or gauze to show the rich materials and profuse ornaments of the tight backless bodice of silk or brocade. The trousers loose above the knees and tight above the ankle are of silk of soberer hue than the chemise and richly brocaded and gold-laced down the sides and at the skirts. The usual indoor headdress is the missar a triangle of flowered or plain silk with one side laced or edged with gold buttons. Over the chemise out of doors or on ceremonial occasions is worn the scarf a three-yard flowered square piece of gauze odena or malāya or brown silk having gold lace edges and the seams hidden with embroidered lace. In the house with few exceptions both Kachh and Halāi Memans keep the feet bare, slippers being occasionally worn. On going out a rich Meman lady of either class draws over her dress the *Malāya*² or Malacca brown silken sheet with gold lace seams or fringes. On their feet the Halāi women whether rich or poor never wear stockings and often not slippers, while out of doors the Kachhis always wear stockings and shoes of Afghan leather. On occasions of ceremony Meman ladies in addition to their indoor dress wear a scarf round the neck, the scarf chemise and trousers being more richly embroidered with seed-pearls and gold lace than is the practice among other Sunni ladies. Halāi Meman ladies are lavish of gold and silver ornaments and sparing of jewels. This is less notable among Kachh Memans many of whom have complete sets of valuable jewels. Neither Halāis nor Kachhis wear any sign of mourning. Except that she wears no nose-stud sith and does not attend marriages or other festive gatherings a widow is not expected to conform to mourning rules.

Though great eaters and fond of good cheer, the Memans according to Musalmān ideas are indifferent cooks and somewhat coarse feeders. The corpulence of most middle-aged Memans of the well-to-do class is due in great measure to the large quantity of clarified butter ghi they accustom themselves to take from childhood. Four dishes, originally from north Gujarāt, are much prized by Memans. These are: A stew of rice and sheep-bones with ghi called hadda pulāo or bone-stew by the Kachhis and mindrāja or royal dish by the Halāis. The second, their favourite at the evening meal, is a blend of rice and black gram mūng Phaseolus mungo known as mūng ki khichadi. The blend is taken in two forms. First, to the rice and pulse are added as much ghi as the mess can bear without dripping, and with this is taken curds whey pulse-biscuits or mango pickle. When this is over some of the blend is mixed with a cup of milk and supped like milk-pudding or porridge. The third is a stew of fish and Indian horse radish sektā Moringa pterygospermum beans or fish and dhendi Hibiscus esculentus. The fourth called muthia or fist-cakes by the

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.
Dress.

Food.

¹ The position of the buttons is one of the two main differences between a Meman and a Khojāh woman's dress. The chemise of the Khojāh lady has its buttons in the middle of the chest below the neck, the Meman lady's chemise has a button over each shoulder.

² The word is Arabic showing that the article of dress was borrowed by the Arabs from the country which gave it its name.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HERND
CONVERTS.
TRADEES.
Memans.
Beliefs.

Kachhis and dokris or thick-cakes by the Háláris, is of pulso with pieces of salted fish and lumps of rice and millet bread roasted or steamed with spices and ghi.

Memans, both Kachhis and Háláris, are Sunnis of the Hanafi school to which most of the Indian and Turkish Musalmáns belong. As a class Memans are religious, though some of them, especially the Kachhis keep to early non-Muslim social usages. The most notable of these non-Islamic customs is their refusal, like their ancestors the Loháns,¹ to allow their daughters and widows any inheritance.² So careful are the Memans to perform the pilgrimage to Makkah that about forty per cent of their number have the honourable prefix of Háji or pilgrim. As soon as he has laid by money enough a Meman takes his wife and sometimes very young children, and, undaunted by the dangers of the voyage, for he who cares for him at home will guard him on the way to His House, starts for Makkah and, if he can afford it, Madínah. If he has wealth and leisure, the Meman pilgrim visits Baghdád to worship at the shrine of his patron saint Maulána Abdúl Kádir Gílání. For those who have made or are unable to make the great pilgrimage several Indian shrines are usually visited, in Gujarát the shrine of Sháh Álam at Ahmedábád and the spirit-scaring tomb of Mirán Sayad Ali Dátár at Unja about fifty-six miles north of Ahmedábád. Since the opening of the Rájputána Railway the Meman from Gujarát and Bombay has become a constant visitor at the death-day fairs or was of Khájah Muín-ud-dín Chishli of Ajmer. Like other Sunnis the Meman's belief in magic and sorcery centres in the traditional maxim "Magic is true, but he who practices magic is an infidel."³ To the practice of white magic, soothsaying fál kholna, and the procuring of luck-charms and amulets they have like other Musalmáns no objection. They also believe in astrology and consult astrologers, a practice condemned by the Prophet. Their advisers in soothsaying and witchcraft are poor Sayads.⁴ The present

¹ See Borradaile's Caste Rules, 903-901.

² As has been noticed at page 47 note 1 in A.D. 1817 a case occurred which shows how firmly the Memans cling to their original tribal customs. The widow of Háji Núr Muhammad of the Zakariyyá family demanded a share of her deceased husband's property. The jámá-at or community decided that a widow had no claim to share her husband's estate. Before the High Court, in spite of the ridicule of other Sunnis, the elders of the Kachhi Memans declared that their caste-rules denied the widow's claim. The matter caused and is still (A.D. 1896) causing agitation as the doctors of the Sunni law at Makkah have decided that as the law of inheritance is laid down by the Holy Kuráan, a wilful departure from it is little short of apostasy. The Memans are contemplating a change. So far they have not found themselves able to depart from their tribal practice.

³ Jádd bar hakk hai, magar usla karné wále Káfir.

⁴ A Meman's wife the mother of several children dies. After a decent interval the Meman marries again. The new wife sickens and her ailment does not yield to the common home treatment employed by her mother or mother-in-law. She is advised to resort to alc chhald or spirit-treatment. On going to bed the sick woman lays some grains of rice and either five coppers, or a two or four-anna silver piece with a copper under her pillow and in the morning by a servant or poor female relative sends the rice and money to some cunning Sayad or exorcist. The Sayad takes the grains of rice, hears the account of the illness, breathes on the rice and blows a prayer on the copper or silver. He says: The spirit of a dead woman is in this coin. Had the lady's lord a former wife, and did the wife die? "True words" replies the lady's emissary. Then the sickness is the haunting of the troubled spirit of the former wife. But, objects the messenger, religious head of the Kachhi Memans, the nineteenth in descent from Pir Eāsnufuddin, lives at Mundra about forty miles east of Māndvi in Kachhi. He pays his followers a yearly or two-yearly visit when a money subscription called kheda from Rs. 2 to Rs. 200 is gathered from every Meman family and paid to the Pir. Momans also honour the Bukhārī Sayads of Ahmedābād. Besides a high priest living usually at Sachind in the Panjāb and visiting his Gujarāt followers about once every five years the Hālāis have a provincial head or Mukhi who lives at Dhorāji in Kāthiāwār. This man has power to hear and pass orders in petty marriage and divorce and sometimes in inheritance cases.

Except a small body of craftsmen Memans are traders merchants dealers or shopkeepers in any branch of commerce except intoxicants and other traffic which is forbidden to the followers of Islām. As shopkeepers and miscellaneous dealers next to the Jāmnagar Bohorās, the Memans are perhaps the most numerous and certainly the most successful among Musalmāns. They owe their success in business to their freedom from display and their close and personal attention to and keen interest in business. The richest Meman merchant does not disdain to do what a Pārsi merchant of his position would leave to his clerks. Their hope and courage are also excellent endowments. They engage without fear in any promising new branch of trade and are daring in their ventures, a trait partly inherited from their Lohāna ancestors and partly due to their faith in the luck which their saint's favour secures them. Except what they borrow for trade purposes, Memans with rare exceptions are free from debt. They are careful generally to conform to the Islāmic injunction against lending money at interest, though in the complicated accounts of large foreign firms interest on capital may not altogether be excluded. Though they have lately begun to teach their boys English, Memans as a class are averse from the higher education. Most Meman girls have a fair knowledge of Hindustani and are well grounded in religious matters.

Sa'balia's. See DUDWALAS.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
TRADERS.
Memans.

Calling.

Sa'balia's.

my mistress is very good to the children of the deceased. 'It is not the children' returns the wise one (the Siyāna as the exorcist is called by women). 'Has your mistress observed the death-day of the late wife? Perhaps she does not even know it. Tell your mistress that when she possesses the love of the dead lady's lord and is mistress of all that once was hers it is but a light tribute to feed five Sayads or poor men on curds, rice and pulse-porridge on the former wife's death day.' The friend brings back the Sayal's message. The Sayad is called. The sick woman sits in front of him unveiled. The Sayad burns frankincense, cuts a lime or two, mumbles over a nail and hammers it into the threshold. Either then or after the cure is completed he is paid from Rs. 1½ to Rs. 5½. Sometimes the Sayad does not consider this enough and while leaving asks his patient to send him a white chunna, plays every morning. On the plate the Sayad traces in saffron ink either some squares with certain figures or writes the most potent and effective of all spirit and magic charms, the 113th chapter of the Kurān, the Throne Verse, which runs: "Allah! there is no God but he, the living, the self-subsisting; neither slumber nor sleep seizeth him. To him belongeth whatever is in heaven and on earth. Who is he that can intercede with him except by his will? He knoweth their present and their past, and they encompass nothing of his knowledge except so far as he pleaseth. His throne is spread over heaven and earth, and the keeping of both burdens him not. He is the high, the mighty." The patient has to dissolve the writing or figures in water or rosewater and drink it. Sometimes a charm is written on paper to be dissolved and drunk or to be worn in a silver case round the neck or arm.

III.—Land.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Behlms.

Under Land come twenty-one classes; Behlms, Bohorás, Chávadás, Chowáns, Gámetis, Ghermehdis, Gohels, Jetás, Kasbátis, Khokhars, Makwánás, Maliks, Mátíás, Molsenláms, Parmárs, Ráthors, Samás, Shekhdás, Solámkis, Sumrás, and Tánks.

Behlms, converted Rajpúts of the Behlim tribe, are found in north Gujarát and in Broach. The Behlms seem originally to have been a Turkish tribe. Farishtáh (Persian Text, I. 87) mentions a certain Muhammad Behlim or Báhalim probably an Islámised Turk who held Láhor on behalf of Sultán Arsalán Sháh (A.D. 1115-1118) on the accession of Sultán Bahráw Sháh to the thrones of Ghazni and Hindustán. Bahráw Sháh of Ghazni entered India in A.D. 1118 with the object of chastising and quelling the disturbance caused by this Behlim. In the contest which followed Behlim, was taken prisoner. But Sultán Bahráw Sháh set him free and restored him to his position of commander of the Láhor forces. In spite of this settlement, on the return of Bahráw Sháh to Ghazni, Behlim built the fort of Nágor in the country of Siwálk in the neighbourhood of Bera (Elliott, II. 279-80) and having placed his family and property in the fort gathered a numerous army of Arabs Persians Afgháns and Khilji Turks and endeavoured to regain his independence. Bahráw Sháh returned to India and engaging Behlim in battle near Multán slew Behlim together with his ten sons. Farishtáh (Ditto) mentions that during a short period of his independence Behlim overthrew and subjugated many haughty Hindu chiefs. This is probably the invasion by Muhammad Behlim of Márwár noticed by Elliott, II. 280, and the Rás Múla, I. 176. Like the Chávadás, Chowáns, Gohels, Jetás, Makwánás, Ráthors, Solámkis and Tánks, by intermarrying with other Musalmáns, the Behlms have ceased to form a separate class, and their tribal name has become little more than a surname. To all of these classes the details given in the Ráthor account (Below page 68) apply.

Bohora's.

Bohora's¹ are a large class numbering in the Broach district alone over 30,000. Besides in Broach, peasant Bohorás are found south in the Ulpád and Mándvi sub-divisions of the Surat district, east in Baroda, and north in Ahmedábád and Káthiáwár. If the account of the Dáudi or trading Bohorás is correct (Above page 25), these peasant Bohorás are chiefly the descendants of Hindu converts of the unarmed castes, who adopted Islám at the close of the fourteenth and during the fifteenth centuries.² In addition to this, their look and ¹ At Dholka in Ahmedábád there are a few families of Dáudi peasant Bohorás. But as a class peasant Bohorás are Sunnis.

² Besides under Muzaffar Sháh (A.D. 1390-1413) when they became a separate body, the Fanni Bohorás probably received additions, both from Hindus and perhaps from the ranks of the Shíah Bohorás, during their conversion under Sultán Ahmed I. (A.D. 1411-1413), Mahmúd Begada (A.D. 1459-1513), and Mahmúd II. (A.D. 1535-1554). Many peasant Bohorás know to what Hindu caste their forefathers belonged. A large number, settled in Tárod in Broach, claim descent from Manchárám, a Bráhman of Morvi in Káthiáwár who was converted by Mahmúd Begada. The present head of the family is thirteenth in descent from the first convert. Some Bohorás in Dhandhuka, Kávi, and Jambuzar are Rávalis, some in Bharkodra are Vónis, some in Devdi are Rajpúts, manner would, at least in Broach, seem to show that they include some considerable foreign element.¹ The men have strong burly muscular frames with fair complexions and high regular features. They shave the head and wear the beard long and full. The women are tall, stout, and fair with good features. Except among the Ankleshvar Bohorás who speak half-Hindustáni half-Gujarátí, their home language is Gujarátí, with less peculiarity of dialect than among the Dáudis. Their ordinary food is rice millet-bread and pulse. They eat fish or flesh, never drink liquor, and, except in the Kávi subdivision of the Broach district and the north, seldom take opium. In north Gujarát a cultivating Bohora wears a large loose turban, a jacket bundi, a waistscarf pichodi, and trousers like a Káthi's, loose above but tight under the knee and buttoned at the ankle. In central Gujarát he wears a full turban though less large and loose than in the north, a coat, and a waistcloth tied round the body without being passed between the legs. South of the Narbada he generally has on a patchwork padded skullcap, a long coat, and loose trousers tammán. Men wear silver necklaces wristlets rings and sometimes anklets.² Shoes are worn by all.³ Except in and near some of the chief towns where they have lately adopted Musalmán fashions, over the whole of Gujarát peasant

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Bohora's.

some in Tankári are Ishkís or Ishkísís, some in Khánpur are Dheds, some in Aeshodi are Chánárs, some in Móra are Khátrís, and some in Akola are Mod Chánérs. The distinction is still (A.D. 1898) kept up. Those who claim high-caste descent refuse to give their daughters to lower class Bohorás. K. B. Fazl Latfulláh, 14th July 1878.

¹All who have studied the Broach peasant Bohorás have dwelt on their peculiar appearance and character. But what the non-Gujarát element is has not yet been settled. They have been called Arabian Jews and some among the cultivators claim descent from Ishmael the son of Abraham (Vaupel in Trans. Bom. Geog. Soc. (A.D. 1840) VII. 46). Captain Oran in one of the note books of the first Broach Survey (A.D. 1818), gives an account which he had from the Tankári Bohorás, and of the truth of which he was confident. According to this account the Emperor Jahángir (A.D. 1618) finding some Márvádi prisoners of war enslaved by a Hindu chief gave them their freedom. To show their gratitude the Márvádis became Muhammadáns, and in reward were settled in waste lands in Gujarát. Some of the Kára cultivating Bohorás give almost the same account, and though these Márvádi converts cannot have been the original Bohorás, they may at one time have been a distinct class like or the same as the Rikápurís mentioned below page 62. As far as features and manners go, a Márvádi element would very well explain the Broach Bohora's special looks and ways. This Márvádi strain may be a trace of the special Gurjjara settlement in Broach (A.D. 590-818). The following are some of the village Bohora surnames: Abhin, Bidat, Bhabha, Bobat, Dhaleji, Doba, Dokrat, Ghatu, Goga, Godaria, Hidar, Harif, Jema, Mayalt, Mausá, Mchhar, Oala, Paravia, Rangela, Taravin, Taravo, Timol, Vaona, Vawra, Wankar.

²The details are: Necklace túnpia, Rs. 150; wristlets phonehis, Rs. 100 to Rs. 120; and rings padr and rinás, Rs. 100 to Rs. 120. The anklet worth Rs. 40 to Rs. 80 is generally given up at the age of twenty-five. Sometimes it is worn in consequence of a vow and a ring added for every year.

³A peasant Bohora in easy circumstances, with say a yearly income of Rs. 1000, will have for every-day wear two turbans together worth Rs. 30, eight cotton jackets at annas 12 each, eight coats at Rs. 1½ each, and four waistcloths, two silkbordered at Rs. 4 the pair and a pair of plain ones worth Rs. 1½; he will also have eight pairs of trousers at Rs. 1 each, four scarfs at Rs. 2½ each, and four coloured handkerchiefs at Rs. 1½ each. For ceremonial dress he will have one gold turban worth Rs. 100 and two plain turbans worth Rs. 30 each, one gold cloth or sela worth Rs. 70 to Rs. 100, one brocade jacket worth Rs. 70 to Rs. 100, and two ordinary jackets at Rs. 3 each, and two waistcloths each worth Rs. 5. The shoes will either be the same as on workdays or a new plain pair costing Rs. 1½ to Rs. 3.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Bohora's.

Bohora women dress like Hindu women in an upper scarf bodice and petticoat.¹ They all wear shoes. Their ornaments are peculiar, very massive and heavy, in make partly Hindu partly Musalmán. They are more particular than the women of most local classes to avoid ornaments that ring or tinkle.² Almost all are landholders and peasants, their women helping them in field work. They are independent and overbearing,³ inclined to be turbulent, and at times commit most cruel crimes.⁴ Though honest and straightforward in Ahmedábád they have in Broach a bad name for deceit and craft. They are most skilful and hardworking husbandmen, and, though liberal and hospitable, are sober and thrifty. Though much poorer than at the close of the American war (A.D. 1865), cultivating Bohorás as a class are well-to-do. The Rámdir and Surat Bohorás have of late become rich and prosperous in trading with Burma and East Africa. Prosperous Bohorás settled in south Gujarát cities and in Bombay have adopted the Moman dress or the Arab coat and overcoat with the gold-bordered or silk-embroidered arched turban. Their home language also is undergoing a change from Gujaráti to Urdu. Some of the Surat Bohorás settled in Bombay have begun to intermarry with the regular classes.

The cultivating Bohorás are Sunnis in faith and religious, some knowing the Kuraán and many of them careful to say their prayers. Almost all have spiritual guides Pirzádúhs, whom they treat with great respect. Most peasant Bohorás still keep some Hindu practices. Some of them call their children by Hindu names, Akúji or Bájbháu, and others have oddly changed Musalmán names, as, among boys Ibru or Ibla for Ibráhim and Ispu or Isap for Yusúf, and among girls Khaja for

¹ The details are: In a well-to-do family for every-day wear, six country-made red and white sadis or robes at Rs. 2 each, eight bodices at Rs. 13, and four petticoats at Rs. 2; for ceremonial dress, sadis of three kinds, the full sadi worth Rs. 100, a smaller sadi richly worked with gold, Rs. 60, and the scarf bánt or reta, Rs. 50; four bolices at Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 each, and two gold-embroidered silk petticoats at Rs. 10 to Rs. 50 each.

² The details are: Brow ornament dámmi and tila, gold and precious stones worth Rs. 30; nose-ring nakh, large, gold Rs. 30; earrings for the rim withis, gold rings worth Rs. 200; for the lobe durs, gold pendants Rs. 50; and eúlis of silver, Rs. 30; necklaces hauali, brass plated with gold or silver, Rs. 30 to Rs. 100; kalesari gold-plated, Rs. 20 to Rs. 100; momna glass beads, with gold ball in the middle, Rs. 15; wristlets kallás, gold or silver, Rs. 75; bangles balás, ivory plated with gold, worn by married women whose husbands are alive, Rs. 20 to Rs. 100; finger rings, Rs. 10; anklets kámmis, silver-twisted, Rs. 80 to Rs. 100; adnkítas silver chains, Rs. 150; langars silver chains, Rs. 80; toe-rings jodids, Rs. 5.

³ When a Bohora and a Hindu meet in a Broach road, the Bohora's cart has seldom to force its way out of the rut. So special a position have the Bohorás that they are locally known as rodjar-lok or soldiers, the common Hindu expression for the rougher class of Europeans. In north Gujarát the Dhandhuka Bohorás are for the same reason called viputhis or deshi rodjars country soldiers.

⁴ In January 1810, at Bodhán near Surat one Abul-ul-Rehman, claiming to be the Imám Mehdi, raised a strong force of Sunni Bohorás, took the fort and town of Mándri, defied the British Government, and was not brought to order till he and more than 200 of his followers were slain (Surat Gazetteer, II. 165). Of late years one of their chief offences against public order was in 1857 (15th May), when, to avenge an insult on their religion, 200 Bohorás from the villages round, marched into Broach, beat Bezanji the offending Párai to death, and at the altar of his fire-temple killed the Párai high priest. (Surat Gazetteer, II. 476-477.) Among themselves, Bohorás carry grudges or adhrat so far as to commit murders in some cases of their own near relations in such a way as to throw suspicion on some enemy or rival. (Compare Surat Gazetteer, II. 508.)

Khatija and Fatúdi for Fátima. Two or three days before marriage in honour of a special deity Wánudev they distribute dishes of two kinds of pulse, láng and wál, boiled together. At death their women beat the breast and wail like Hindus. The practice of celebrating marriage pregnancy and death by large entertainments is carried to an extreme by Bohorás. At such times a rich man will feast his castefellows for several days, and one day's entertainment at least is compulsory upon all. Among the Bohorás, when a caste-dinner is to be given the village barber is sent round to ask the guests. When the entertainment is to celebrate a marriage, the guests come together at about five in the evening, and when the feast is given on the occasion of a death they meet between ten and twelve in the morning. As a rule women sit down to dine after the men have finished. Formerly, even when the host was a rich man, a caste-dinner consisted of rice pulse and clarified butter. But since the great cotton profits of A.D. 1863-64, it has become the practice to prepare rich and costly food.¹

Within the last seventeen years (1880-1897) among a large section of the peasant Bohorás, both in Broach and Surat, but chiefly near Surat among those known as Biriávi Bohorás,² Gheir Mukallid or Wahnábi preachers have spread their doctrines with much success. Many of these Biriávi Bohorás, who have always been a strongly religious class, giving up their old spiritual guides, have transferred their reverence to Gheir Mukallid teachers, who begin to hold among them the position of leaders in religious and to some extent in secular matters. The growing fervour of their belief in Islám is shown in the change in their women's dress from the Hindu to the Musalmán fashion; in the disuse of toddy and other intoxicating drinks; in giving up their huge public dinners and extravagant expenditure on marriages deaths and other ceremonies; in stopping music at their festivals, and wailing and breast-beating at their funerals; in ceasing from Hindu practices and strictly following the details of the law. The converts are said to make no attempt to hide their change of belief. Among them English learning is held dangerous to religion and morality and in its place the new-kindled zeal for Islám, both in village mosques and in a college in the town of Rándir, gathers bands of youths to be taught the religious literature of their faith. Discussions between the orthodox and the reformers are common. They are carried on with coolness and courtesy. As yet no ill-feeling has been stirred and between the old and new parties marriage and other social relations are in no way strained.

Except in the case of some rich men settled in Surat and Bombay Sunni village Bohorás seldom marry with any one not of their own

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Bohora's.

¹ A first class caste-dinner is now either of sweetmeats pakvín or of balls of sugar clarified butter and wheat flour ládi, and other preparations of clarified butter sugar and flour called lansár. Only very few poor people now give dinners of rice and pulse. The expense of a caste-dinner varies according to the quality of the food from 3 to 5 annas a guest, and the number of guests from 200 to 4000. Rich Bohorás are said to spend more than Rs. 1000 on marriage dinners and as much as Rs. 3000 on funeral feasts.

² So called from their head-quarters the village Biriávi five miles north of Surat.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Bohora's.

class. Each of their villages has its headman and community, and the different villages have, at times of public excitement, shown themselves ready to join together for a common purpose. At the same time they have no head and very little class organization. Among the various classes and villages, their difference of origin continues the ground of social distinctions. The villagers north of the Narbada do not marry with those to the south. In Dhandhuka some families claiming the title of Desai, hold aloof from the common Bohora villagers, and, in several parts of Broach, houses of Bráhman or Rajpút descent, though they allow their sons to marry with them, refuse to give their daughters to families whose forefathers were Kolis Rávalis or Dheds.

As a class their prospects are good. Some of them have lately begun to send their children to school, teaching them Gujaráti and in a few cases English.

Ka'ka'puris.

Ka'ka'puris, Sons of Slaves, are a small class closely connected with the village Bohorás. They are said to have come from Márwár during some great famine, and, in return for a subsistence, to have adopted the religion of the Bohorás and entered their service. Except that they wear tight Koli trousers cholnás, they can hardly be known from the Bohorás. The fact that there were many in A.D. 1820, and only nine in A.D. 1872, seems to show that the Káka'puris are gradually merging into the Bohora community.

Ga'metis.

Ga'metis, Holders of a village or gám, except in the size of their estates, do not differ from Kasbátis, with whom they intermarry (page 64).

Ghermehdis.

Ghermehdis,¹ Disbelievers in Mehdi or the coming Imám, are found in small numbers in most parts of Gujarát, in Bombay, in Sindh, in Upper Hindustán, and in the Dakhan. They are converted Hindus and foreign Musalmáns, the followers of a certain Muhammad Mehdi, a descendant of Husain the grandson of the Prophet, born in A.D. 1443 (H. 847) in Jaunpur, a town near Banáras. Muhammad at the age of forty began to act as a saint wali, and both at Jaunpur and afterwards at Makka, drew around him a large body of followers. On his return to India, at Ahmedábád in A.D. 1497 (H. 903) and at Pattan in A.D. 1499 (H. 905), he openly laid claim to be the looked-for Mehdi. The Mirát-i-Sikandari² notices the arrival in Ahmedábád, about the end of Sultán Mahmúd Begada's reign (A.D. 1459 - 1511), of Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri who claimed to be the Mehdi. The Sayad it is stated "came and put up at the mosque of Tájkhán Sálár near the Jamálpur Gate. People in crowds used to go to hear his eloquent sermons. His fame as a preacher reached the ears of the Sultán (Mahmúd Begada) and the Sultán expressed a desire to see him. The ministers, afraid lest his effective words should bring about a change in the Sultán's views and revolutionize the affairs of the kingdom, dissuaded Mahmúd from giving the Sayad an interview."

¹ They consider the name Ghermehdi abusive and delight in calling themselves Mehdevis.
² Persian Text Samt MS. page 144.

The Mirāt-i-Sikandari relates a meeting between the Sayad and the grandson of the saint Kutbi Alam Shāh Sheikh Jīva in which the two holy men carried on a conversation in quotations from the Kura'n. A miracle of Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri is also recorded by the Mirāt-i-Sikandari: A young man having passed the night with his beloved and having quarrelled with her towards early morning, walked away in anger towards the river Sābarmati. The Sheikh going to the river with some of his followers, to perform his early devotions, meeting the young man said 'I can show the way to the Divine Love to him who has come away in anger from his Worldly Love.' The young man screamed and fell in a swoon from which he rose a staunch follower of the saint and gave up his worldly life. The cause of the Sayad's moving from Ahmedābād to Pattan was this. He observed one day to one of his followers: 'I can show you Allah with these eyes of flesh.' This speech of his reached the ears of the learned men (Ulamā) of Ahmedābād, who, on being satisfied of the truth of the report, drew up against Sayad Muhammad a charge of apostacy. The charge sheet was signed by all the law doctors of Islām at Ahmedābād with the exception of their head, Maulāna Muhammad Tāj. On seeing the names of the Maulavis on the charge sheet the Maulāna asked the leader of the movement 'Have you gained learning only to put it to such uses as the killing of a Sayad?' In the delay caused by this disagreement Sayad Muhammad left Ahmedābād and took up his residence in the village of Barli near Pattan. His public career was throughout marked by the working of miracles. He raised the dead, gave sight to the blind, and speech to the dumb. He travelled much, accompanied by two companions, Sayad Khondmīr and Sayad Muhammad. In Farah, a city of Khurāsān in A.D. 1504 (910 H.), Muhammad Mehdi died of fever, maintaining to the last that he was the promised Mehdi. After his death his disciples dispersed, part returning to Gujarāt under Sayad Khondmīr and part remaining at Farah with Sayad Muhammad. For a time his followers in Gujarāt are said to have remained unmolested, professing their faith openly, and even challenging controversy as to its origin and truth. They are said to have grown in numbers and importance, until in A.D. 1523 (H. 930) they attracted the attention of Sultān Muzaffar II. (A.D. 1513-1526). Under his orders, some of their number suffered martyrdom at Ahmedābād, and against the rest, who had settled near Pattan, troops were sent. As they offered resistance Sayad Khondmīr and his followers were defeated and their leader killed. This sect was again persecuted at Ahmedābād when (A.D. 1615) Aurangzib was governor, and several of them were put to the sword for declaring that the Mehdi had appeared and was gone. The north Gujarāt Mehdavis are a peculiar race and differ from their co-religionists in most points. The Pālanpur and Dakhan Naidarābād Mehdavis are not converted Hindus but claim descent from Mir Khondmīr and Sayad Muhammad the followers of the Mehdi. They say that after the death of their Mehdi (A.D. 1504) at Farah these two followers returned to India and after many wanderings over India settled some in north Gujarāt and some in Naidarābād (Dakhan). The Pālanpur branch made the ruling Lohāni dynasty of

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
LANDHOLDERS.
Qhermehdis.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.
Ghermehdis.

that state their followers and there established their *dāirah*¹ literally enclosure or settlement. The Pālanpur Mehdavis call themselves Sayads and Pīrzādāhs. In Pālanpur the Sayad Pīrzādāhs claim the whole of the moveable property of their followers of rank after their death. They also make it a rule for their followers living in the villages round about Pālanpur to bring their dead in the first instance to the house of the Sayad from where after the performance of some secret rites the corpse is taken and buried. Though free to profess their opinions, the Mehdavis still practise caution takiyah, and are anxious to pass as orthodox Muslims.² They speak Hindustāni but have nothing special in their appearance. Both men and women dress like north Gujarāt Musalmāns. They are peasants, the women helping in the field. They are clean, honest, hardworking, quiet, and thrifty. They are in fair condition, many of them able to save. They hold that Muhammad their saint was the last Imām the expected Mehdi, and as he is come they neither repent for their sins nor pray for the souls of the dead. They are said to bury the dead with the face down. They marry only among themselves. They have no headman but form circles dāirahs, governed by rules of their own. Property in default of heirs belongs to their Sayads who are descendants of Husain. Some of their children learn Gujarāti and a few English.

Kasba'tis.

Kasba'tis, Owners of towns or kashās, found in many parts of north Gujarāt, are some of them descended from Balūch or Pathān mercenaries and others from Rājput converts.³ The Sami Kasbātis, according to one tradition, are descendants of some Sayad soldiers of fortune that followed Mahmūd the Ghaznavide into Gujarāt (A.D. 1023-1025). According to another version they are the descendants of two Sayad brothers who in the reign of Shams-ud-dīn Altamsh (A.D. 1211-1236) came to India from Ghazni and settled at Makanpur near Kānpūr and one of whom Azud-ud-dīn came and settled at Sami perhaps as a retainer of the Hindu ruler of Pattan at Unjha. Mīrān Sayad Ali of Unjha, about eighteen miles west of Pattan, claims descent from this Kasbāti.⁴ Their home language is either Hindustāni mixed with Gujarāti or Hindustāni only. They are strongly made, about the middle height, and of varying colour wearing the hair long and the beard of moderate size. The women are rather delicate but fair and good-looking. They hold large grants of land, and are quarrelsome and litigious, given to opium and some of them to liquor, hospitable, thriftless, and fond of amusement. Their women do not appear in public. Sunnis in faith they are not a religious class; only a few know the Kura'n or say their prayers. Occasionally, but of late much seldomer than formerly,

¹ By dāirah is meant a circle that is a circular enclosure marked off by a saint for the exercise in solitude of his religious meditations. In its present significance it has come to mean a quarter inhabited by the Mehdavis.

² In Broach they are known as Dabhoiyās from the town of Dabhoi in Baroda.

³ The Dholka Kasbātis are of three classes, Minās and Behens who came from Dehli at the close of the sixteenth century, and converted Rājputs, the descendants of the Muli Parmirs. Rāi Māla (New Edition), 280, 401. At Idar there used to be 1500 houses of Kasbātis, Nāiks, and Bhātis, who had charge of the Idar gates and batteries. Rāi Māla, 452.

⁴ M.S. pedigrees of Sayads in the possession of Maulavi Pīr Ali Sāheb of Pattan.

they marry Hindu wives, Rajputs and sometimes Kolis. At such marriages the bride's friends occasionally call in a Brahman; in other cases the ceremony is entirely Musalmán. Their children have Pathán names, the boys Jáfarkhán or Mndawwarkhán, the girls Ládlibibi or Dúlábibi. Some of the Dholka Kasháti women of the better class have curious names, such as Ládliáeliha instead of Ládlibibi or Ládlibái. At death they have no Hindu customs. In their anxiety to keep their position as large landholders, if their sons fail to find any suitable match in their own class, they marry into landowning Hindu and Molesakám families. They give their daughters only to Musalmáns. They have no headman and do not form a distinct community. Some who are prosperous teach their children Gujaráti and a few English. Most Ahmedabád Kashátis are sunk in debt and weakened in mind and body by the excessive use of opium.¹

Khokhars, converted Rajputs of the Khokhar tribe, are found in small numbers in north Gujarát and Káthiáwár. In appearance they do not differ from Rajputs. In Káthiáwár, both men and women dress like Hindus, but like Musalmáns in Ahmedabád and north Gujarát. They are peasants, labourers, and messengers. They are mentioned in the Xin-i-Akhari (Blochman's Edn. page 156 note 2) as "a tribe of some importance in Pind Dadan Khán" in the Panjáb. Kádár the Mughl is mentioned in the Tárikh-i-Alái by Amír Khusró as crossing the Satluj and other Panjáb rivers and burning the villages of the Khokhars in the beginning of Alá-ud-dín's reign about A.D. 1205. The Khokhars are said to derive their name from koh mountain and gír taker, because they once took an impregnable mountain fortresses. They claim Afghan extraction and state that they are still represented in Afghanistan by a Kheyl (tribe) of this name.² They are landholders in Pattan and also perform military service. The Pattan Khokhars are well off and are a handsome well-made race. As far as possible they intermarry among themselves but do not object to matrimonial connections with the Bábis, Lohánis, and other Patháns. Major Raverty in his translation of the *Tabakát-i-Násiri*³ refers to them as being invaded by Kutb-ud-dín Ibak in or about the year A.D. 599 (A.D. 1202). Their ancient territory now forms the Ráwalpindi district.⁴ As a class they are badly off.⁵

Makwánas, converts from the Makwána tribe⁶ of Rajputs or Kolis, are found over many parts of north Gujarát. The men are dark, tall, spare, and muscular. They wear the hair long and the beard parted from the middle of the chin and tied behind the ears. The women

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
LANDHOLDERS,
Kasbatís.

Khokhars.

Makwánas

¹ In A.D. 1827 their state would seem to have been much the same. A few were men of influence, but most were poor and broken-down, enervated by excessive use of opium, and incapable of any useful exertion. Some of them acted as revenue farmers of villages, but for this they had neither capital nor capacity. Melville's Panjab in Gov. Rec. X, 10. Further details are given in the Ahmedabád Gazetteer, IV, 147, 170-185.

² The late Khwakhán Jamsílár of Pálanpur in His Highness the Diwán's service.

³ Vol. I, page 521 note.

⁴ Vol. I, page 537 note.

⁵ According to a Musalmán folk they got their name from khona to lose and kharr an ass, because they lost the king's ass.

⁶ For an account of the Mahi Kántha Makwánas see Hon. Gov. Sel. XII, 18.

* The Mirat-i-Ahmedi-calls them Mats or Matlis. Persian Text, I. 338.

of Ahmedabad and the Khojibs of Sorath are offshoots of the main Nazariu stock. The Matias are a tribe who inhabit also the districts of Khindesh and Baglana and engage themselves in agricultural pursuits. Those living in the Siba of Ahmedabad (Gujarat) are called Momias and those who live in Sorath are called Khojibs. Being converted by Sayad Imam-ud-din they belong to a number of Hindu classes who entered Islam under his guidance. They have such faith in their religious teachers that they give a tenth part of whatever their yearly earnings may be to their spiritual guide. They carry this rule to so extreme an extent that if any of them has ten children he is bound either to present one of his children to the Sayad or to fix and pay the Sayad a money value or ransom for the child. Their large revenues derived from their followers enable the saints to enjoy a high degree of ease and splendour. So entirely do the saints look upon their Marids (spiritual followers) as a source of revenue that the Sayads when marrying their daughters give away a number of their followers to them as part of their dowry. Some Momias remain members of their caste being Hindus in everything but religion. When Sayad Shahji one of the descendants of Imam-ud-din (A.D. 1691) succeeded his father in the spiritual headship of the Matias so many thousands of his followers presented themselves at his place of residence, Karamthah near Ahmedabad, asking to be admitted to his presence that he could hardly find a moment of privacy and sometimes used to stretch out his foot from behind the curtain. The belief of his followers was so sincere that they used to consider even this act of their Pir a great condescension and used to kiss the saint's foot and place their offerings of money near it and retire satisfied and happy.¹ In the days of Hazrat Kamil Mukani (Aurangzeb A.D. 1658-1707) much attention began to be given to the Muhammadan Law and to the rooting out of dissent. Most men adopted very strict religious views to become popular with the emperor and accused the Matias and their spiritual guide of being Rāfizis (Shiā'is). A few of the accused were thrown into prison. Some one reported to the emperor an account of Sayad Shahji and his religion and ways. Aurangzeb ordered an enquiry to be held and the spiritual guide was ordered to present himself before the Kūzi at Ahmedabad. Being unwilling to attend Sayad Shahji took poison and died. This inflamed the anger of his followers and to revenge his death a large number of Matias crossed the Nerbada and took Bhuruch killing the Fanjdār. They were destroyed by Muhiriz Bābi and Nazamli Khān the lieutenants of Shujaat Khān the viceroy of Gujarat, but not until they had made a most gallant stand willingly preferring death to defeat and captivity. Neither in food nor in dress do they differ from Hindus. All are cultivators, the same in character and condition as other Lera Kanbis. They call Brāhmins to all their chief ceremonies, and except that the Pirana saint is their spiritual guide, that they help to support and go to visit his tomb, and that they bury their

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS
LANDHOLDERS.
Matia Kanbis.

¹ Blind belief in the spiritual guide is one of the necessary conditions of the Sufi religion, one of the doctrines of which is Piri me khas ast istikadi me bas ast Our saint is straw, our belief is everything.

² Letter of 12th Feb. 1867 to Bom. Gov. Vol. Rec. 45 of 1866.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
Chf	HINDU
Sub	CONVERTS.
	LANDHOLDERS.
C.	Molesala'ms.
LA
Gh

dead, their customs are Hindu. Their peculiar views have separated them from other Kauhīs, and as they marry only among themselves they form a distinct body.

Molesala'ms, found chiefly in Broach and in the Rewa Kántha, are half converts to Islām, made from among Rajpúts, chiefly in the reign of Mahmūd Begada (A.D. 1459-1513). Of the name several interpretations have been given. According to Colonel Walker² (A.D. 1805), the word is a corruption of Mu'ti-íl-Islām Submissive to the faith, applied to the Girásīs in reproach, implying that they are merely passive Musalmāns professing the faith of Islām while practising the rites of their ancestors. Again the word Maula means master as well as slave. Taking it to mean master the rendering would be 'Masters in Islām,' like Khojāh or Lord, a case of the grant to converts of an honourable title. The third explanation is that during the first days of the success of Islām it was the custom that when an infidel was converted to Islām by a Musalmān that infidel was called the Maula of the converter.¹ When Mahmūd Begada converted these people to Islām, being a sincere and devoted Musalmān, in preference to calling his converts Maulas of Mahmūd he called them Maulas of Islām. The explanation given by Mr. Forbes² in the Rās Māla is that Rajpúts who were put out of caste in the time of Mahmūd Begada formed a separate class called 'Molesalām' because they had bowed or made salām to the mehel or palace of the Sultān. The Molesalām Thākors of Amod and Kervāda in Broach claim descent from Jādav Rajpúts who were converted by Mahmūd Begada in A.D. 1486. Of the four derivations the second, namely that it means Masters in Islām, seems the most likely to be correct.

Molesalām thākors and chiefs, while employing Kāz's Sayads and Maulawīs, maintain the descendants of their old Brāhman family priests and support their Bhāts and Chārāns, whom the rich engage to while away their leisure hours by reciting poetry and the poor to serve as priests at marriages. A Molesalām will marry his daughter to a Sayad a Sheikh a Moghal or a Bābi, but not, as a rule, to a Musalmān of the lower order. The son of a chief may get a Rajpút girl in marriage. But other Molesalāms marry either among their own people or the poorer class of Musalmāns. Indoors a Molesalām wears a waistcloth; out of doors a turban coat and trousers, with, like a Rajpút, a cloth wound round the waist or thrown over the shoulders. Women wear a robe sāllā, a bodice, and a petticoat. Molesalāms dine with other Musalmāns, but except that they sometimes take flesh, they eat and drink like Hindus.

Parma'rs.

Parma'rs are Rajpút converts. There is no record of the date of their conversion to Islām but they are referred to as having been already Islāmised in A.D. 1317 when Mubārak Shāh formed his disreputable connection with a Parmār of the name of Hasan who was given the title of Khusrāo Khān. Hasan's brother Hissām-ud-dīn was given the viceroyalty of Gujarāt but the Parmār Rajpūts of that province became so turbulent that he had to be removed. Farishtah¹ calls these Parmārs a class of Gujarāt pahlavāns or athletes. The Parmārs are to be found in north Gujarāt. They intermarry among the converted Rajpūt classes and are either landowners, cultivators or servants, that is messengers or policemen. They are a handsome and well-formed race.

¹ See Hāfi Khallikān (Wafāt ul-Āyān) Amb. Text 37, where in the biographical sketch of Al Ishakānī, the famous Hāfiz or Kuraṭa reciter and historian, the author says that Al Ishakānī's first ancestor who became a convert to Islām was one Mīhrān who joined Islām as a Maula of Mubārak son of Mu'iniyaṭ.

² Rās Māla, I. 313.

Rāthors, converts from the Rāthor tribe of Rajpūts, are to be found in small numbers in different parts of north Gujarāt. The men are strong and well made, fierce in expression, and except that they do not shave the chin, hardly to be known from Rajpūts. Except wives of Hīn-Jū birth, who when living at their father's house dress like Rajpūts, the women wear the Musalmān scarf gown and trousers. The men earn their living as landlords, peasants and messengers, and are idle and shiftless. They are Sunnis in name, but are not religious, neither learning the Kurān nor saying their prayers. A few of them have Swāmīnārāyan pictures in their houses and reverence them. Their ceremonies are in many respects Hindu. At marriages the larger landlords keep to the Rajpūt custom of sending a sword to the bride's house and bringing her back for the ceremony to the bridegroom's village. When the bride is a Hindu, both Brāhman and Musalmān ceremonies are performed. At deaths the women wail and beat the breast. Except that they marry only among Rajpūts and Kolis, either Hindu or Musalmān, they do not form a separate community and have no headman. Though in fairly good condition few of them send their children to school.

Sama's are found scattered over north Gujarāt. According to Sir Henry Elliot² they are a branch of the great Yādava stock deriving their pedigree from Sāmha the son of Kṛishna "who himself is known as Syāma or the Dark One." The Chāchnāmāh³ represents the Samās as living on the banks of the Lower Indus about A.D. 712 and as coming out dancing with cymbals and trumpets to offer their allegiance to Muḥammad son of Kāsim, the Arab conqueror of Sindh. Their pedigree in which descent from the sun and the moon is hopelessly mixed shows that the Yādava story is a bardic or priestly invention to justify their place among Hindus. The Sāmās are probably a Turk tribe which entered India during the seventh century A.D.

Shaikhda's or Shaikhs, found chiefly in Broach and Ahmed-ābād, are one of the classes of devotees who worship at the shrine of Bālā Muḥammad Shāh, one of the minor Pīrāna saints. In their ways they differ little from the Matia Kanbis. They bury their dead, but except for this observance and for their name, their customs are Hindu. They are not circumcised, and do not eat with

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LANDHOLDERS.

Rāthors

Samas.

Shaikhda's.

¹ Persian Text, I. 219-222.

² Sir Henry Elliot's History of India, I. 191.

³ Chāchnāmāh in Elliot, I. 191.

	Chapter II.
	Subdivisions.
Ch	HINDU
Sul	CONVERTS.
	LANDHOLDERS.
C
La	Solankis.
Gh

Musalmins, but wear forehead marks tilla, and many of them belong to the community of the Swāminārāyans. At the time of marriage both a Musalman and a Hindu priest attend. The Musalman ceremony is performed by a fakir and the Hindu rite of chori or altar-worship by a Brāhman. Like the Matia Kanbis of Surat, the Shaikhdaś form a distinct community.

Solankis, converts from the Solanki tribe of Rajputs, are found in small numbers in different parts of north Gujarāt. They intermarry with the Rāthors and other converted Rajputs, and do not differ from them in look, calling, or customs.

Sumra's. Sumra's, a Sindh tribe of Rajput origin, were partly converted by Mahmūd Begada in A.D. 1478 (A.H. 876) during his conquest of Sindh.¹ Sir Henry Elliot calls the Sumras 'a lunar race unquestionably of the Parandāra stock and necessarily Agnikulas,' that is belonging to the Mihira Gurjjara or White Hūra hordes of the late fifth or early sixth century.² The main part seem to have become converts to Islām about the beginning of the eighth century of the Christian era and to have called themselves descendants of the Arab tribes of Tamīm and Kuraish and children of Tamīm the Ansāri.

Tānks. Tānks, to whom belonged the family of the Sultāns of Gujarāt (A.D. 1403-1583), are now rarely heard of. The Mīrat-i-Sikandari³ traces their origin to Rāmachandra and says that they were excommunicated by the Kshatrias on account of one of their ancestors being addicted to wine. This is a play on the sound of the word tyāgi or degraded. The Tānks seem to represent the famous tribe of Tukshaks who gave its name to the Panjāb or Takkadesh.⁴ The family of the Gujarāt Sultāns was descended from two Tānk brothers named Sālu and Sabāran. The ancestors of these men together with the Gurjjaras appear to have been long settled in the Panjāb plains in the neighbourhood of Thāncsar in Sihind. Having treated Fīrūz Tughlak (A.D. 1351-1388) with great hospitality in one of his hunting expeditions the brothers were taken by him to Court and converted to Islām and raised to positions of trust about his person. The author of the Sikandari⁵ rejects the charge that the Tānks were kalāls or wine manufacturers and sellers. He says: The Tānk rulers of Gujarāt were men of kind and generous natures who during the span of their power did incalculable good to the creatures of Allah.

IV.—Crafts.

CRAFTSMEN.

Of craftsmen there are twenty-two classes: Baudhārās, silk-folders; Bhādbhunjās, grain-parchers; Chhispās, calico-printers; Chūnadigirās, silk printers and dyers; Chūnārās, limeburners;

¹ Mīrat-i-Sikandari (Mahmūd Begada) MS, page 102.

² Sir Henry Elliot's History of India, I. Appdx. 490.

³ Mīrat-i-Sikandari, Persian Text Surat MS, page 3.

⁴ Elliot's Tribes of the North-West Provinces, I. 107-109, 114.

⁵ Persian Text Surat MS, page 9.

Chudigars or Chudiwālas, braceletmakers; Ghānehis, oilpressers; Kāglzis, papermakers; Kadiās, brickmakers; Kusāis, butchers; Kharādis, turners; Khātkis, tanners; Lohārs, blacksmiths; Maniārs, ivory-workers; Momnās, weavers; Multāni Mochis, shoemakers; Nālband, horse-shoers; Pānjuigars, starchers; Rangrez, dyers; Salāts, masons; Sonis, goldsmiths; and Tāis, weavers.

Bandha'ra's, Silkfolders, found in considerable numbers over the whole of Gajarāt, are converts from the Hindu caste of the same name. The men are strongly made, rather short, and fair shaving the head and wearing the beard. The women are middle-sized, rather short and fair with good features. Their home speech is Hindustāni. Except that their trousers are unusually short, and that some of them in north Gajarāt wear the three-cornered turban, the men dress like ordinary Musalmāns. Most of the women wear the Hindu dress, very often the silk robes sent them to clean. Their ornaments are like those of ordinary Musalmāns. In north Gajarāt the men beat wash and fold silk and silk robes, both new and old, the women helping them in their work. In the south, in addition to the washing and folding, they sell silk and silk-cotton cloth. They are clean, honest, hardworking, sober, quiet, thrifty, and fond of amusement. The women appear in public. As a class they are fairly off, able to save, and few of them in debt. They are Sunnis in faith, knowing the Kura'n, and most of them careful to say their prayers. There is nothing peculiar in their customs. They marry only among themselves and have a well-managed union but no special headman. Some of them teach their children Gajarāti and a few English. None have risen to any high position.

Bha'dbhunja's, Grain-parchers, literally parchers at the fire-place bhād, are found in all parts of the province. They marry with other Musalmāns and do not form a separate class.

Chhi'pa's, Calico-Printers, found in north and central Gajarāt, are Hindu converts, some of them of the Gajarāti and others of the Mārvaḍi caste of the same name. The Mārvaḍis are late arrivals. Most of them came in the year of the last Mārwaḍi famine (A.D. 1858), and others still keep coming. The Gajarātis are strong, well-made, tall, dark with shaved head and full beard; the Mārvaḍis are stronger, lighter in colour, and have the head unshaved. The women of both classes are well made and fairish with irregular features. At home the Gajarātis speak Hindustāni and Gajarāti; the Mārvaḍis the dialect of their own country. Except that the men wear the waistcloth, the Gajarātis, both men and women, dress like Musalmāns of the lower order. The Mārvaḍi men have a small red or particoloured turban, a Hindu coat, and a waistcloth. Their women dress like Hindus in a red headscarf odna, the long loose unbuttoned Mārvaḍi bodice, and the long full low-waisted petticoat. They work as calico-printers, the Gajarātis being quiet and the Mārvaḍis quarrelsome. Neither has a good name for honesty, and both are thrifty to stinginess. Their condition is good the Mārvaḍis having in a few years raised themselves from beggary to comfort. They are Sunnis in religion, and though only a few can

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU CONVERTS. CRAFTSMEN.

Bandha'ra's.

Bha'dbhunja's.

Chhi'pa's.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Chundadi-gira's.

read the Kuraán, they are careful to say their prayers. They have no special spiritual guide and no peculiar customs. At all their settlements each class has a well-managed union jamáat, with a headman chosen by the members. Neither class sends their children to school.

Chu'ndadigira's, Silk-knot-Printers, are found over the whole province. They have no subdivisions. They claim to be of Arab descent and to have come into Gujarát through Siml; but most of them are probably of Hindu origin. They are of middle height, fair, and well-featured, allowing the hair and beard to grow. The women are well made and have good features. Their home tongue is Hindustáni and Gujaráti in Káthiáwár. Both men and women make patterns in cloth by gathering the silk in puckers and rosettes and knotting it. In Surat, but not in Ahmedábád, they dye. Some are in Government service as messengers and constables. Especially in north Gujarát they are hardworking, sober, thrifty, hospitable, and rather quick-tempered. They are in middling condition with steady but low-paid work. Sunnis in faith, they are zealous for their religion, some, both women and men, knowing the Kuraán. For three days after a death the mourners are fed at the common cost, for six days more by their relations, and on the tenth day they give a dinner. They form a distinct community, marrying only among themselves. They have a union but no headman. The men in Ahmedábád work together in one room, where, in the evening they play chess and read. They send their children to school, and some of them teach them English. They are a pushing class, and some have risen to good positions: one is superintendent of the Lnuárida state and another, lately dead, was a good Hindustáni poet.

Chuna'ra's.

Chuna'ra's, Limeburners, found in small numbers in all parts of the province, are said to be converts from low class Hindus. Their home tongue is Gujaráti. The men wear a three-cornered turban, a coat puckered under the arm, and a waistcloth; the women dress like Hindus. They make and burn lime and work as bricklayers; the women do house work. They are noisy idlers and dissipated. As a class they are well-to-do and able to save. They are Sunnis in name, but know little of their religion. At deaths the women beat the breast and wail. They marry only among themselves and have a union but no headman. They do not teach their children or better their condition.

Chu'di'wa'la's.

Chu'di'wa'la's, Braceletmakers, found in all parts of the province, are said to be converted Hindus of the same class. They speak Hindustáni at home. Of middle height and slightly built, they vary much in colour, and wear the hair and beard. The women are middle-sized, fairish, and good-looking. Both men and women dress like the poorer Muhammadans of south Gujarát. They make and sell bracelets of glass and lac or tin, some of the tin ones ornamented with borders of gold and brass leaf. They are sold in three-pair sets at 4 annas to 4 rupees the set. The women go about selling the bracelets. The men are honest, hardworking, quiet, sober, and thrifty. They are Sunnis in religion, some knowing the Kuraán and saying their prayers.

They are poor, some of them in debt. They have no peculiar customs. They marry with other Musalmáns. They form a well-ordered body, but have no headman. A few teach their children Gujaráti but not English. None have risen to any high position.

Gha'nchis, Oilmen, are found in all parts of the province, especially in the north. In some places they are known as Ghánchis and in others as Ghánchi-Bohorás, the word Bohora being apparently used in the general sense of un-armed Hindu converts. They are said to be the descendants of Hindus of the Pinjárn and Ghánchi castes. Like the Musalmán Pinjárnís they call themselves Mansúris or followers of Mansúr. The men are strong, big, well-made, and fair. The young men wear the hair and keep the beard short. The old shave the head and let the beard grow. The women are handsome, fair, and well-featured, in appearance much like Hindu Ghánchis. In their houses they speak Gujaráti. The men wear a Musalmán turban and a high-fastening coat. In Ahmedábád they wear the waistcloth, and in the Panch Maháls sometimes a waistcloth sometimes trousers. The Godhra women have lately taken to wearing the Musalmán dress. But except that young girls put on the Muhammadan scarf, in other places they dress like Hindus. The men are cartdrivers oilpressers milksellers and peasants, the women sell milk and do house work. In oil the Musalmán Ghánchi deals wholesale, selling to a retail Hindu Ghánchi. Their houses are tidy and well kept. The men are fairly honest, hardworking, sober, thrifty, and quarrelsome; the women especially those of Godhra are fond of pleasure and dress. As a class they are well-to-do. Sunnis in religion they call themselves followers of Mansúr, but have no special practices. Except the Godhra women who as a class are religious, they are ignorant of their faith. Like the Sunni Bohorás, the Pinjárnís and the Karáliás, they have curious forms of names, using Ibla for Ibráhim, Dosta or Dokla for Dosa, Momda for Muhammad, Isab for Yúsuf, Pazla for Fázal, and Fatu or Fatali for Fátimah. They also use Hindu names as Jívi, Múnkor, and Dhanbái. At marriages their women, as among the Hindus, go singing with the bridegroom to the bride's house, and at marriage feasts they generally have Hindu dishes. In Modása like Hindus the women wear up to the shoulder rows of broad ivory rings. At deaths the women wail and beat the breast. They marry only among themselves and the Pinjárnís. They form a separate body jamát, with its headman chosen by the members. They have begun to teach their children Gujaráti and a few English. Though some of them are rich none have risen to any high position.

Ka'ghzís, Papermakers, are found in considerable numbers in north Gujarát. They are said to be converted Hindus. As a rule they are big brawny men, fair, and well-featured. Some shave the crown of the head, some the whole head, and a few young men let the hair grow. All wear the beard. The women are middle-sized, well-made, fair and with regular features. The men wear a large loosely-tide round red or white turban, either the common coat or one puckered under the arm, short trousers chóludás, and shoes. The women indoors dress in gown and trousers like other Musalmáns, out of doors

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.¹
CRAFTSMEN.
Gha'nchis.

Ka'ghzís.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Ka'ghzls.

they put on the over-gown pishaváz. They make and sell the strong coarse country paper for which Ahmedábád has long been famous.¹ The women help and do house work. The men are quiet honest hard-working and sober, but rather fond of pleasure. Formerly their craft was prosperous, but of late years the demand has fallen off. Sunnis by religion, many, both men and women, know the Kuraán and are careful to say their prayers. They are followers of the Chishtis of Ahmedábád and treat them with much respect. Their customs are those of ordinary Muhammadans. They marry only among themselves and under their spiritual guide form a distinct body. Some of their boys learn Gujaráti and Arabic and a few English. None have risen to any high position.

Kadia's.

Kadia's, Bricklayers, found in small numbers in all parts of Gujarát, are converted from the Hindu caste of the same name. In the north their home tongue is Gujaráti and in the south Hindustáni. Tall strong and dark with regular features, they wear the hair in the north and in the south shave the head. All grow large beards. The men in north Gujarát wear the Musalmán turban, the young red or bronze-coloured and the old white, a coat of Hindu shape, a waistcloth, and shoes. In south Gujarát they wear a broadfolded round turban, generally of coloured cloth, a coat of Hindu shape, loose short trousers, and shoes. The women in the north dress like Hindus and in the south like Musalmáns. They are bricklayers, and in Surat have a name for their taste in decorating the walls of rooms. The women do house work. They are quiet, honest, sober, hardworking but rather thriftless. The women are allowed to appear in public. They are poor and not free from debt. Sunnis in religion, some know the Kuraán and almost all are careful to say their prayers. They are followers of a descendant of the Pirána saint Imámsháh and are much devoted to him. There is nothing special in their customs. They marry only among themselves and form a separate body with their spiritual guide as head. They do not teach their children either Gujaráti or English. None of them have risen to any high position.

Kasa'is.

Kasa'is, Butchers, are found in large numbers in all parts of Gujarát. They are of two classes, beef-butchers Gáo Kassáb or Gái Kasái and mutton-butchers Bakkar Kasái. Both of them believe themselves to be of Rajpút origin. Cow-killing butchers do not intermarry with goat and sheep-killing butchers. They are tall, strong, and of average fairness; their women are handsome and well-featured. So well fed are they that according to a Hindustáni proverb Kasái ki beti das varas men bachha janti hai The butcher's daughter has a child when ten years old. In the cities their home tongue is Hindustáni and Gujaráti in the country. The men wear ordinary turbans, some of them rich and gaudy, a coat, tight trousers, and shoes. In towns the women dress like Musalmáns and in country parts like Hindus. Like cooks bhatíaras they are fond of putting on ornaments. The elder women help in the sale of the lighter and smaller parts of the animals. Except for thrift, the butcher has credit for few good qualities. The proverb says Nā dekhx ho bāg to dekh bilūi, Nā dekhā ho thag to dekh Kasāi If you have not seen a tiger, look at a cat; if you have not seen a thag or strangler, look at a butcher. The women are famous for their powers of abuse. They are well off, most of them saving money. Sunnis in religion, a few both among men and women know the Kura'n and are careful to say their prayers. They have no unusual customs. They marry only among themselves. They have a headman and a well-managed union, with a common fund spent on mosques, on feeding travellers, and on the poor. With few exceptions they are illiterate. None have risen to any high position.

¹ Neither the Dastakálád nor the Kashmir paper equals either in whiteness or purity that made at Ahmedábád. Bird's Nest-Ahmedí, 105.

Kharā'dis, Turners, are found in small numbers over the whole province, and form a large body in Ahmedābād. The Ahmedābād Kharā'dis are said to be converts from the Hindu caste of the same name; in Surat and other places they seem to be a mixed class. They are of average height and colour, with nothing special in their appearance. The women are said to be goodlooking. Both women and men dress like Musalmāns. They are turners by craft, their women giving them no help in their work. They are quiet and sober with no very good name for honesty or thrift. As a class they are well-to-do. Sunnis in faith, they are religious, most of them knowing the Kura'n. Their customs are those of ordinary Musalmāns. They marry only among themselves and have a union but no headman. They do not teach their children either Gujarāti or English and none have risen to any high position.

Kha'tkis, Tanners, found in considerable numbers all over the province, form two classes, tanners proper, and felt-makers dhūlgars literally shield-makers. They belong to the same class as butchers and intermarry with them. Though not so well off, they are like butchers in look, dress, speech, and character. They tan sheep and goat skins, and in country places sell mutton. They go round villages buying skins, and after tanning them sell to wholesale hide merchants. The women help in the work of tanning.

Luhā'rs, Blacksmiths, found in west Gujarāt, Gogha, and Kāthiāwār are immigrants from Sindh. The men are rather short weak and dark, the hair of their head moderately long, the beard short and rather full. The women are dark. At home they speak Gujarāti. The men dress like Memāns with a Musalmān turban coat and trousers. The women dress like Hindus. They make knives, nunterackers, iron tools, spearheads, and daggers. The women do house work. They are quiet, hardworking, thrifty, and fairly off. They are Sunnis in religion, some of them knowing the Kura'n and being careful to say their prayers. They have no special customs. They marry with other Musalmāns and have no separate headman or union. They teach their children Gujarāti but not English. None of them have risen to any high position.

Maniā'rs, Ivory Banglemakers, found chiefly in Ahmedābād and Kāthiāwār and a few in Surat and Broach, are converted Hindus. They

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Kasā'is.

Kharā'dis.

Kha'tkis.

Luhā'rs.

Maniā'rs.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Maniárs,

are fair and goodlooking. The home tongue of some is Gujaráti and to others Kachhi. The men wear a large loose turban, a coat, and a waist-cloth, or very loose trousers of striped cotton cloth. The women in north Gujarát and Káthiáwár dress like Hindus, generally wearing a black robe to set off their fair skins. They make bracelets and other ivory articles. The women do house work. The men are quiet hardworking and thrifty. They are well-to-do and able to save. Sunnis in religion, some know the Kuraán and are careful to say their prayers. They have no spiritual guide, but reverence Sháh Alam the well-known Ahmedábád saint. Like the Ghánchis, the women sing wedding songs, and at deaths beat the breast and wail. They marry only among themselves, and form a separate union with a headman. Few teach their children Gujaráti and none English. Some of the Gujarát Maniárs have risen to great wealth in the ivory trade in Bombay.

Momná's.

Momná's, properly Momins Believers, are found in considerable numbers all over Gujarát. They are the descendants of Hindus of many castes, converted¹ to the Shiáh form of faith by different members of the family of Ismáília Sayads, of whom Imámsháh (A.D. 1449) of Pirána² is the most distinguished. Though from their head-quarters known as Rádharpuri Dhándhári or Pálanpuri, and from their more immediate religious guides known as Masháikhsháhi Núrsháhi and Mahmúdszáhi, all are Imámsháhi Musalmáns. With the Matías of Khándesh, the Gujarát Momnás, about the close of the seventeenth century (A.D. 1691), rose in revolt, taking, and for some time holding the city of Broach.³ The men are short, rather stout, fair, and well-featured. Most of them shave the head and wear the beard; but the Ahmedábád sect spare the Hindu topknot, and shave the face except the upper lip. The women are well-made and fair with regular features. The men of the Ahmedábád sect wear the Vánia turban and in every part of their dress copy the Hindus. Other men wear a three-cornered Muhammadan turban and coat, and either the Hindu waistcloth or trousers so loose as to give them the name of ghúgharia or petticoated Bohorás.⁴ The women, except a few in Surat, dress like Hindus. Almost all eat flesh, but for fear of offending the Hindus, whose wishes their position as weavers forces them to humour, they do not use it at their public dinners. The men are silk and cotton weavers,

¹ Of their conversion two stories are told, one, that Imám Sháh by bringing rain after two seasons of scarcity, converted a large body of Hindu cultivators. The other that a band of pilgrims were passing Pirána on their way to Banáras, Imám Sháh offered to take them thence. They agreed and in a trice were in the holy city. They put their yokes, bathed in the Ganges, and awoke to find themselves in Pirána.

² Pirána is ten miles south-east of Ahmedábád. Details of the Pirána tombs are given in the Ahmedábád Statistical Account under Pirána. There are five chief tombs: Imámsháh's, worshipped chiefly by Hindus; Bála Muhammad's, worshipped by the Shaikhs or Shaikháds; Surkháhl's, worshipped by Baháris and other Hindus; Bákár Alf's, worshipped chiefly by Hindus; and the tomb of Núrsháh the direct head of the Núrsháhi Momnás. Masháikh, who gives his name to the Masháikhsháhi Momnás is buried at Ahmedábád, and the tomb of the leader of the Mahmúdszáhis is at Dhadiád near Dholera.

³ Watson's Gujarát History, 82.

⁴ For other cases of the general use of Bohorás see Above page 21.

dyers, cloth-dealers, and husbandmen. In Kaira and other parts of north Gujarāt many of the weavers are said to have once been husbandmen. The women weave and prepare thread. Not over-honest or truthful they are hardworking, sober, tidy, and almost niggardly in their thrift. The women appear in public. The Momnās are Shiāhs in faith. Except the Ahmedābād sect, they read Kutb-ud-dīn's Gujarātī Kuraān, and as a prayer repeat their saint's name. The Ahmedābād sect, instead of the Kuraān, read Imāmshāh's book of religious rules and some of them are said stealthily to worship Hindu gods. Many Momnās who are Shiāhs at heart profess to be Sunnis. But there would seem to be in Surat a small body of Momnās who really belong to the orthodox faith. These have lately separated though they still intermarry with their Shiāh connections. All practise circumcision and bury the dead. In other matters the customs of the Ahmedābād sect differ considerably from those of regular Muslims. Hindu names are common in north Gujarāt though rare in the south, and while with ordinary Momnās marriages take place according to the Musalmān rules, the Ahmedābād sect, in addition to the Musalmān marriage, call in a Brāhman and go through the Hindu ceremony.¹ In north Gujarāt, among all Momnās marriage takes place at a very early age, sometimes before the children are weaned, and they follow the Hindu practice of holding a high festival when the bride comes of age and goes to live with her husband. At deaths, like Hindus, the women wail and beat the breast. Except the Ahmedābād sect, all Momnās intermarry, the Kāzi of ordinary Musalmāns performing the ceremony. Each settlement has its union, headman, and code of rules which are generally well kept. Among Pālanpur Momnās serious disputes are referred to the spiritual guide at Pālanpur, to whom every adult pays a yearly tax of Rs. 1½. They teach their children Gujarātī and some in Surat English. None of them have risen to any high position.

Mu'ta'nis and Mu'ta'ni Mochis, Shoemakers from Multān, are found in all the chief cities of Gujarāt. Escaping from North India, probably on the occasion of one of the early Muhammadan invasions, they settled in Gujarāt and were, according to their own account, converted to Islām during the reign of Mahmūd Begada (A.D. 1459-1513). People calling themselves Mūltānis sell dry fish and fuel and petty grocery in Nūsik. These according to General Briggs (Transac. Lity. Socy. Bombay. Vol. I. page 193) emigrated from Multān in A.D. 1739 when Nādir Shāh invaded India and they followed Asaf Jāh the Nizām to the Deccan. In the north of Gujarāt there are Mūltāni Pathāns or simply Mūltānis who add the title Khān to their names and are soldiers tailors or servants. The heaviness of their faces and bodies may be taken as a proof of their northern origin. As far as possible they marry among themselves. They say they came originally from Multān. The north Gujarāt Mūltānis speak Hindustāni. The men dress like middle-class Musalmāns, the Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Momna's.

Mu'ta'nis
and Mu'ta'ni
Mochis.

¹ Among Mahi Kāntha and Parāntij Momnās the practice noticed by Mr. Melvill in 1827 (Bom. Gov. Sel. X. 9) of having a marriage ceremony performed by a Brāhman is still kept. The Ahmedābād sect intermarry with the Parāntij Momnās, and when such has been the custom in the bride's family the Hindu marriage is performed.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
CRAFTSMEN.

Mu'ta'nis
and Mu'ta'ni
Mochis.

women wear the petticoat and sári. Their home tongue is Hindustáni with a peculiar accent. The men are slightly made, many of them with a stoop, dark or ruddy-olive in colour, but with regular features; the women are well-made and fair. Their houses are small and one-storied, always with a veranda, where the men and women sit together at work. Inside there is little furniture, a bed or cot, some mats and stools, and a few cooking pots. There is nothing special in their food. The men dress like Musalmáns of the lower order. The women wear a red cotton headscarf dupatta, a red gown pishwáz,¹ and trousers. They have no special ornaments. In times of mourning, though like other Musalmáns their widows break their bangles, unlike them they continue to wear the red headscarf. They are hardworking and thrifty, but have a poor name for honesty. Many of them are workers in leather. In making shoes, contrary to the usual practice, they sew the leather wrong side out and then turn it. Especially among women, their shoes are in great request, and though in poor circumstances few of them are in debt. Sunnis in name, they care little for religion and have no special customs or beliefs. They hold a low position among Musalmáns, forming a separate body, marrying only among themselves. They are without a headman or any class organization. Hardly any of them can read or write and very few send their children to school.

Na'lbands.

Na'lbands, Horseshoers, are found in all districts. The men shoe horses and the women spin cotton. They intermarry with other Musalmáns, and are like them in look speech and dress, and have no separate union or headman. They are thrifty and well-to-do but bear no very good name for cleanliness honesty or soborness. They are fairly religious. As a rule they are illiterate, but one in the north has risen to be a clerk in Government service.

Pa'njniga'rs.

Pa'njniga'rs, Cotton-thread Starchers, found in all parts of the province, are converts from the Hindu caste of the same name. They shave the head, but there is nothing special in their look. At home they speak a mixture of Hindustáni and Gujaráti, and both men and women wear the ordinary Musalmán dress. All are engaged in starching thread. They are quiet thrifty fairly sober and honest. Their work though steady is poorly paid, and as their craft is easy to learn there is much competition. Sunnis in name, they are not a religious class, few of them knowing the Kura'n. They marry only among themselves and have no special customs. They have a well-managed union with a separate headman. They do not send their children to school.

Hi'r
Pa'njniga'rs.

Hi'r Pa'njniga'rs, Silk Starchers, though they intermarry and in all respects resemble them, are a separate body from the Pánjnigárs or cotton starchers. Musalmáns have a monopoly of this craft as the starch is made of old leather boiled down with limejuice and Hindus will not touch it.

¹ The pishwáz worn by these women is in some points unlike that of ordinary Muhammadans. It has not the usual number of folds and plaits, and is made to serve the purpose of the bodice which they do not wear.

Rangrez, Dyers, found in all parts of Gujarát, are of Hindu origin and said to be converts from the Khatri or Hindu weaver caste. They have no subdivisions. They are tall muscular and fair wearing the hair and a full beard. The women are of middle height fair and well-featured. Their home tongue is Hindustáni. Both men and women dress like Muhammadans. The Rangrez women of north Gujarát wear shirts and scarves of a dark purple or bronze. They dye in all colours, and deal in safflower kasumba. The women knot cloth for calico-printing. They are quiet sober hardworking and thrifty, and are well-to-do and able to save. The women appear in public. They are Sunnis by religion, teaching their children the Kuraán and being careful to say their prayers. Except that at marriages the bridegroom walks instead of riding, they have no peculiar customs. In north Gujarát Musalmáns of different classes are known as Rangrez, but in Surat there is one distinct community who marry only among themselves and have a union and headman. Most of them besides the Kuraán, teach their children Gujaráti and sometimes English. None of them have risen to any high position.

Salá'ts, Masons, found all over the province, are said to be mostly converts from the Hindu caste of the same name. Except Márwáti Salá'ts, who come and go between Márwár and Gujarát, they have no subdivisions. They are strong brawny men, with nothing marked in their appearance. Stone masons by craft some of them are skilled carvers, able to restore the most delicate of the old mouldings and traceries. They speak Hindustáni, and both men and women dress like Muhammadans. The women do not help the men in their work. They are quiet and hardworking but not particularly sober and somewhat thriftless. As a class they are rather badly off. Their customs are those of ordinary Musalmáns. Sunnis in name, they are not religious, few of them knowing the Kuraán. They intermarry with other Musalmáns, but have a separate union and a headman of their own. They do not teach their children and none have risen to any high position.

Sonis, Goldsmiths, found in small numbers in Kachh Káthiáwár and Ahmedábád, are converts from the Hindu caste of the same name. The men are fair and the women handsome. They speak Hindustáni. The men wear a threecornered turban, a coat puckered under the arm, and short trousers. The women dress like Hindus. They all work in gold and silver, and have a bad name for adulterating by mixing cheaper metals. The women help the men in their work, but, as they do not know whom their daughters may marry, the men keep the craft secrets hid from their wives. They are hardworking and sober but not very thrifty. As a class they are well-to-do. Sunnis by religion, some know the Kuraán and are careful to say their prayers. They are disciples of Sayads descended from the Pírán Pír. Except that at deaths the women beat the breast and wail, they have no special customs. They have no separate union or headman. They teach their children Gujaráti but not English. None of them have risen to any high position.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS,
CRAFTSMEN.
Rangrez.

Salá'ts.

Sonis.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
CRAFTSMEN.
Ta'is.

Ta'is, Silk Weavers, found in all parts of Gujarát, claim to take their name from Táí, a city between Turkey and Arabia, and to have been taught weaving and sewing by the Prophet Ídris. They claim descent from Hatím of Táí, the famous Arab hero who flourished immediately before the birth of the Prophet and whose name is proverbial in Arabia for generosity. In Gujarát they are a mixed class some of them foreigners, who seem to have come from Sindh about a thousand years ago, and others converted Gujarát Hindus. Of middle size, weak, light-complexioned, and with fairly regular features, they wear the beard, shave the head, and can hardly be known from other Musalmáns of the lower order. The women are good-looking and well-made. At home some of them speak Hindustáni and others Gujaráti. Except that they wear tight trousers, there is nothing peculiar in the men's dress. The Ta'is of Balsár in the south of Surat claim Arab descent, and wear a Káyasth-like turban, a coat puckered under the arm, and loose Momna-like trousers and shoes. In large towns the women dress like Musalmáns and in country places like Hindus. Except in Balsár where some families do business as bankers and moneylenders, all weave cotton robes and turbans. They are quiet honest hardworking and steady, but their work is badly paid and most of them are poor. They are Sunnis in faith, and, especially in Ahmedábád and Surat, are a religious class, going to the mosque five times a day. Their customs are those of ordinary Musalmáns. They marry among themselves and form a separate union with a headman of their own. Some send their children to the Mulla to learn the Kurán, but as a class they are illiterate.

V.—Service.

SERVANTS.

Under Service come eleven classes, nine of them, Behrúpíás, Bhánds, Bhattís, Bhawayyás, Gandhraps, Kamáliás, Madáris, Mírs or Mírásis, and Táischis, singers and players; one of them, Sipáhis, soldiers and watchmen; and one Turki Hajáms, personal servants.

Behru'piás.

Behru'piás, Men of many forms, one of the eight classes of actors and players, are found in small numbers all over Gujarát. They are a mixed class. At home they speak Hindustáni, and except when performing dress like ordinary Musalmáns. They are ventriloquists and actors with a special skill of dressing one side of their face like a man and the other side like a woman, and moving their head about so sharply that they seem to be two persons. The women never act but do house work. The men are clean honest clever and religious, but rather idle, and some of them unthrifty. The women do not appear in public. Though poor, they are generally free from debt. Sunnis in faith, a few know the Kurán and are careful to say their prayers and follow a religious guide. They do not form a distinct community and have no headman.

Bhánds.

Bhánds, Buffoons, belonging to all classes but chiefly newcomers from the North-West, are found in all large Gujarát towns. They vary much in appearance and speak Hindustáni and dress like ordinary Musalmáns. They sing, dance and act, going about in troops taifal of not less than ten members, each troop with its leader jama'at and its clown. They do not act plays, but tell stories and satires on society as witty and quaint as they are immodest. Between the tales the clown mimics, and the leader sings or dances, sometimes with great skill, the troop accompanying on the fiddle and tambourine. When he dances the leader holds over his head a scarf odna, puts over his man's dress a gown pishwáz, and wears bells at his ankles. They are paid from Rs. 15 to Rs. 100. Half of this goes to the leader and the rest is shared among the troop. They are idle and fond of amusement and neither honest nor sober. Some of them are Sunnis and others Shiáhs. They are fairly religious and a few are able to read the Kuraán. They have no peculiar customs, and except those of the same troop form no separate body. They teach their children Hindustáni and a few are Persian and Arabic scholars.

Bhatti's are a tribe of Rajpúts converted to Islám by Mahmúd of Ghazni (A.D. 1001-1030) during one of his invasions and removed to Bhatinda a town lying between Dehli and the Satlaj.¹ The Gujarát Bhattis have so mixed by intermarriage with the other Musalmán classes that they retain no peculiarity of feature dress customs or character. They serve as messengers or village servants in north Gujarát.

Bhawayya's, Strolling Players, found all over Gujarát are converts from the Hindu class of the same name. The men are of average height and dark, shaving the face and wearing the hair. The women are handsome. They speak Hindustáni. In private the men dress like Muhammadans, and when they act, they dress either like Muhammadan men or women. The women wear the Musalmán dress. The men dance and play before males; the women sing before females. Both men and women lead dissipated lives. As a class they are poor, some of them in debt. They also come to a house where a son has been born and demand gifts. Sunnis in religion, some know the Kuraán, and a few are careful to say their prayers and have a religious guide. They have no special customs. They marry among themselves and have a union but no headman. Very few of them teach their children and none have risen above the position of strolling dancers.

Gandhraps, Singers, found all over Gujarát, are said to be converts from the Hindu class of the same name. The men are middlesized strong fair and well featured; the women handsome. They speak Gujaráti. The men wear a three-cornered turban, a coarse coat, and short tight trousers; the women a head-robe and petticoat. In the dry season they move about the country, and in the rainy months they go to their homes in north-west Gujarát and cultivate. They travel in bands of six to ten; the girls singing and dancing and the men accompanying them on the drum or tambourine. The wives do not perform in public. As a class they are fairly off, some of them able to save. They are Sunnis in religion. A few read the Kuraán

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
SERVANTS.
Bha'nds.

Bhatti's.

Bhawayya's.

Gandhraps.

¹ Tabakát-i-Nasiri by Major H. G. Rwerly, I. 79, 80 note 1.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
SERVANTS.

and are careful to say their prayers, and have a spiritual guide. As the girls become professional dancers and prostitutes, the men never marry in their own class. They seek wives from among poor Musalmáns and sometimes Kolis, paying the fathers Rs. 5 to Rs. 10. The parents live on their daughters' earnings. They have a union and a headman, and during the rainy season generally meet together at marriages. They do not teach their children and show no signs of improvement.

Kama'li's.

Kama'li's, The Perfect, are sprung from Kanoj Bráhmans, worshippers of Bahuchera'ji, who were converted by the Musalmán Emperor Alá-ud-din (A.D. 1297). Their name is derived from kamál or perfect, the title given to their headman when converted to Islám. When they go to Bahuchera'ji they beg in the name of the goddess. They do not circumcise, and except that they brand a dead man's breast and bury him, their ceremonies are Hindu. Some of them are said to be married and have children, others are said to earn a living as eunuchs. Of the Kamáliás the author of the *Mirat-i-Ahmedi*¹ says: In the sub-district of Chunvál, forty miles to the north of Ahmedábád in the village of Sankhanpur under Pattán is a temple wherein is no idol but a window or niche in its western wall which is named after Bahuchra one of the names of the goddess Bhawáni. There are many stories told of this niche which owing to their length we cannot mention here. The most wonderful fact about this temple are its worshippers who are divided into two classes, the Paváiyas and the Kamáliás. The Paváiyas (who are no other than the Hijrás) are men who have adopted female attire and manners. The Kamáliás are men of the military profession who always bear the emblem of Bahuchra which is a trident. Both classes are Musalmáns in name but infidelity is better than their Islám. The Rajpúts and Kolis of those parts who are freebooters and highway robbers so respect these men that if one of them is engaged as a convoy for a caravan, they do not rob it. The cock and the peacock being the vehicles of the goddess are offered at her shrine and no one can harm these birds there. They sacrifice buffaloes at Bahuchra's shrine and make the forehead mark with the victim's blood. Many pilgrims perform vows at the temple and fast till they obtain their wish. Many blind persons are reported to have regained their sight at the temple by these vows. Others who pray or vow to obtain an object of desire or even a horse are given a dream to proceed to a particular person to secure it. The person to whom the votary is directed also gets a dream wherein he is made to identify the votary and is told what to give him.

Mada'ri's.

Mada'ri's, that is Followers of saint Sháh Madar, also called Ba'zigars, Funmakers or Jugglers, are a wandering tribe of players, moving in bands of two or three families over the whole of Gujarát and Málwa. They are converted Hindus of the Nat or tumbler class. The men are middle-sized, strongly made, dark, and well featured. The women are handsome but very dark. They speak Hindustáni and a peculiar dialect of their own. Both men and women dress like Hindus, the men with a cloth wound round their head, a tight-fitting jacket and waistcloth, the women in a small headscarf tight-fitting bodice and flowing petticoat. The men are snakecharmers tumblers and tricksters. The women do not perform with the men but dance and sing before women and sometimes act as prostitutes. They are tidy but idle dissipated and fond of thieving. Sunnis in name, they know little of their religion, worshipping Musalmán saints and Hindu gods and following Hindu customs. They marry only among themselves and form a separate community with a headman. They do not teach their children and show no signs of bettering their position.

¹ Persian Text, II. 98.

Mírs Nobles or Mírasi's Landlords, also called Langhás or singers, Dholis or drum-players, and Doms after the tribe of that name, are found all over Gujarát, but chiefly in the large towns of the north. They were originally of two classes, one the descendants of Gujarát Bháts or bards, the other from northern India partly of Bhát descent and partly connected with the Doms.¹ Mírs now by intermarriage form a single community. The men are tall well-made rather tawny in colour and of good features; the women are well-made and handsome. The Káthiáwár Mírasis wear a large loose-twisted turban, a short jacket, trousers loose above but tight at the ankles, and over the trousers a cloth lungi, wound round the waist and hanging to the knees. All others dress like poor Musalmáns. Except in Ahmedábád and Surat where they dress like Musalmáns, Mírasi women wear Hindu clothes. Some own land, and in the rainy season many work as cultivators. In the fair season the men move about either alone or in twos or threes, begging singing and telling tales, both Hindu and Musalmán, and playing on the drum, the fiddle, the guitar, and the tambourine. The women stay at home, and under the name of Domnis or Langhis, at marriage and other feasts, attend at Muhammadan houses and play and sing before the women. They are thrifty but idle, and neither honest nor sober. Many of the women are of loose character. They are zealous followers of Dáda Mián, an Ahmedábád Sayad, paying him yearly Re. 1 head-money or forty pounds (one man) of wheat. They marry only among themselves, and with the Sayad as their head, form a well managed community. None of them teach their children English or Gujaráti.

Sipa'his, Soldiers, the military class, found in considerable numbers in all parts of Gujarát, seem to be of mixed origin, partly descendants of immigrants and partly of Rajpút converts as their surnames Chohán, Ráthor, and Parmár show. In

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
SERVANTS.
Mada'ris.

Mírs or Mírasi's.

Sipa'his.

¹ A widespread tribe in Bundelkhand, Sgar, and Oudh, sunk to the position of mat-makers and sweepers. Their own fanciful explanation of the word mirdasi, mir a noble and dasi a sinner, because one of their ancestors sinned in eating with a sweeper, perhaps points to the same connection. Burton's Sindh, 303; Elliot's Races, N.W.P. I. 84. They are probably called Mírs out of courtesy as barbers are called Khalifáns or sovereigns, sweepers Moháns or chiefs, and servant girls Wasifáns or accomplished. Khán Bahádúr Kázi Shaháb-ud-dín.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
SERVANTS.

Káthiáwár they speak Gujaráti and in other parts Hindustáni. They marry with other Musalmáns, and have no peculiar appearance; but vary in their fashion of wearing the hair and beard. Except in Káthiáwár, where they dress like Hindus, both men and women wear Musalmán clothes. They are husbandmen and labourers, and are employed in Government service as soldiers, constables, and messengers. The women spin, and except the wives of poor cultivators who work in the fields, they do not appear in public. The men are hardworking but rather thriftless and fond of amusement and stimulants. As a class they are badly off. Sunnis in faith, some of them know the Kuraán, say their prayers, and pay respect to a spiritual guide. They have no peculiar customs. As they marry with other Musalmáns they form no very distinct community, though they have a union and a headman. Some teach their children Gujaráti and a few English. None have risen to any high position.

Ta'shchis.

Ta'shchis, Kettledrum or Tásha Beaters, and Nakkárehis Horse-kettledrum Beaters, are names not of separate classes but of a union among the different musical instrument players. The objects of the union are to equalise the profits of all the members and to guard against the competition of outsiders. A newcomer pays Rs. 1½ to the common fund. At the end of each busy season the members put their earnings into one purse and the amount is equally divided among all. A breach of the rules is punished by a fine of one or two rupees.

Turki Hajáms.

Turki Hajáms,¹ Barbers, a class of Personal Servants found over the whole of Gujarát, are said to be partly the descendants of immigrants and partly converted Hindu barbers. There are two divisions, jokháris leechmen and hajáms barbers. They are tall and dark with thick lips and small eyes. In the south they speak Hindustáni, but in Ahmedábád their home tongue is Gujaráti. The men dress like poor Muhammadans, the jokháris women like Hindus, and, except in Ahmedábád where they dress like Hindus, the hajám women like Musalmáns. The jokháris keep leeches and the hajáms shave and circuncise. Formerly the hajáms had charge of the public baths, two or three of which, with their cold medium and fiercely hot rooms, were, under Mughal rule, to be found in every town. The present bath is a cistern let into the wall at some height from the ground. In the cistern warm water is kept ready, and the bather standing under the cistern, draws out a wooden or cloth plug and lets the water fall over him. For this he pays half an anna. The women spin cotton and act as midwives and nurses. The men are quiet, rather idle, and fond of talk, and not particularly honest sober or thrifty. They are in poor circumstances, many of them in debt. The poor who come to their shop are charged half an anna for having the whole head shaved. The barber goes to the houses of his rich and middle class customers generally on Mondays and Fridays, getting from Rs. 3 to Rs. 10 a year. They are Sunnis by religion, a few of them knowing the Kuraán and being careful to say their prayers. They have a saint Sulaimán Fâras whose day they hallow, and who they say invented shaving with a strip of bamboo. They have no special customs. The two divisions intermarry but form connections with no other class. They have a separate union under a headman. They keep on a friendly footing with their Hindu castefellows and attend each other's public feasts. Except the Kuraán they do not teach their children either Gujaráti or English. None of them have risen to any high position.

¹ Turki seems here to mean Musalmán. By Gujarát Hindus Muhammadans are often called Turkidás or Little Turks.

VI.—Labour.

Of Labourers there are fourteen classes: Banjhárás, carriers; Chátlás, woodcutters; Chhárás, wandering thieves; Dhúldhoyás, dustwashers; Gorkhodiás, gravediggers; Kathiárás, fuelsellers; Máchhis, fishermen; Mális, gardeners; Mapárás, cornweighers; Nágoris, cartdrivers; Nats, tumblers; Pakhális, watermen; Shishgars, glassmakers; and Thoris, cattlestealers.

Banjha'ra's, literally Traders, derived from two Hindustáni words, Banaj trade, and hárá doer,¹ found in all parts of Gujarát, are converts from the Hindu caste of the same name. According to Genl. Briggs (Transactions of the Bombay Literary Society, Vol. I. page 174) the Banjhárás come from four Rajpút tribes, the Ráthors, Burtéas, Choháns, and Pawárs. They are a wandering tribe, encamping during the rainy season in places where they can find sufficient pasture for their cattle, and in the fair season moving backwards and forwards between Márwár and Gujarát. Of middle height, strong, spare, and swarthy, the men wear the hair long and the beard of average length. The women are also of middle height, a little stouter than the men, dark, and wild-looking. Among themselves they speak a dialect not understood by ordinary Musalmáns. The men wear a Márvádi-like turban a coat and waistcloth. The women draw the sári over the head and raise the robe into a high-peaked headdress, by setting inside of it an upright stick about nine inches long which broadens on the head into a cup-like pedestal. Besides the robe they wear a loose unbacked bodice, a long full petticoat, and peaked shoes. Their ornaments are peculiar. Across each temple runs a small silver chain hooked in the middle to a braid of hair, and at the end to the hair over the ear. They also wear noserings and large tin and brass earrings. On their arms from the wrist to the shoulder are tiers of heavy flat bands of copper or tin, they have tin rings on their fingers, and on their legs light chains of brass or tin. Besides bullocks, which they bring to sell, they carry from Márwár wool and coarse blankets, taking back grain salt coconuts and tobacco. The women drive the bullocks. They have a good name for fair dealing, but are idle dirty and thriftless. As a class they are poor, some of them in debt. They circumcise, bury the dead, and are married in the Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
SERVANTS.
Turki
Haja'ms.

LABOURERS.

Banjha'ra's.

¹ General Briggs (Transactions of the Bombay Literary Society, I. 172) considers Ban or Wan a forest and hárá as belonging to or coming from the probable root.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LABOURERS.
Banjha'ra's.

Musalmán form. Still they know little of their religion, and believe in Hindu gods. They bear Hindu names and never eat beef. They marry out of their tribe and form a separate community. Each horde túnda has a separate headman called Náik, whose authority extends as far as the levy of fines from Rs. 5 to 7 in civil disputes. They are in poor condition. In the decay of their former carrying trade, they have taken to no new industry, and are said to be dying out. As carriers of grain for Musalmán armies the Banjharás have figured in history from the days of Muhammad Tughlak (A.D. 1340) to those of Aurangzib (A.D. 1658-1707) and they supplied grain to the British army under the Marquis of Cornwallis during the siege of Seringapatam (A.D. 1791-92).¹

Cha'tla's.

Cha'tla's are a wandering tribe occasionally found in north Gujarát. Of their origin nothing has been traced. The men are short muscular and very dark with long hair. The women are dark with irregular and harsh features. The men wear a coarse white waistcloth and the women a robe drawn over the head and sometimes a bodice. They eat animal food and carcasses. They are woodcutters, bringing in firewood from the forests, and acting as carriers. They are dirty untidy and dissipated. They are miserably poor with a few donkeys and nothing but the barest necessities of life. They are Muhammadans only in name and know nothing of their religion. They believe that the dead become saints pirs. Every year on the anniversary of the Pir's death the family calls the tribe to the tomb, and gives a feast of wine mutton and pork. They bury the dead standing, building a raised tomb two feet square, and in the centre a square altar half a foot higher. They are a wretched class and show no signs of improvement.

Chha'ra's.

Chha'ra's, also called Ghaghariás or Petticoat People, are occasionally found in small numbers all over Gujarát. They are supposed to be converted Hindus, but of their origin nothing certain is known. Besides Hindustáni they speak among themselves a dialect not understood by ordinary Musalmáns. The men are big, strong, and very black with irregular features, the hair and beard long and untidy. The women are better looking but dark. The men wear a cloth round the waist, the women a headscarf odna, a ragged bodice, and a tattered petticoat. During the rains they meet in one place, holding their marriage and other family ceremonies, and settling their disputes. At the beginning of the fair season they break into bands, moving about with Brinjári dogs and donkeys, begging stealing and passing counterfeit coin. They are of bad character. They are Musalmáns only in name and know nothing of their religion. They have a union and a headman called náik.

Dhu'ldhoya's.

Dhu'ldhoya's, Dustwashers, found in considerable numbers all over Gujarát but chiefly in Nadiád and Mehmádábád, are said to be converted Hindus of the Khatri caste. They have a story that once when their earnings as weavers were low, they were blessed by a beggar and told that in future they would find gold in dust. The men are of middle height, well-made, sallow, and well-featured.

¹ General Briggs in Transactions Bombay Literary Society, I. 183.

They grow the beard and wear the hair rather long. The women are well-made fair and handsome. At home they speak Hindustāni. Both men and women dress like ordinary Musalmāns. The men buy dust and other rubbish from the houses of goldsmiths, wash and sift it and carefully pick out the particles of gold or silver found in the refuse. The women spin. They are quiet, honest, truthful, rather idle, sober, and charitable. The women appear in public. Their condition is poor. Sunnis in faith, they are as a class religious, knowing the Kuraān and saying their prayers. They have no special customs. They marry only among themselves and form a separate body with a headman of their own. They teach their children Hindustāni and Gujarāti and sometimes English. None have risen to any high position.

Gorkhodia's, Gravediggers, found in small numbers in all parts of the province, are of mixed origin, partly foreign partly Hindu. In appearance they are small and dark. They speak Hindustāni. The men wear a three-cornered turban, the common coat, and short trousers. The women dress like Musalmāns. The men dig graves and the women spin. They are quiet and sober, dirty untidy and thriftless. The women are well behaved. As a class they are poor, some of them sunk in debt. Sunnis in religion, some of them learn the Kuraān, but are not regular in saying their prayers. They have no special customs. They hold a very low position, marry among themselves, and have no union or headman. They do not teach their children and none have risen to any high position.

Kathia'ra's, Fnel sellers, are richer than Karāliās or Pot-sellers (page 36) with whom they marry.

Mā'chhis, Fishermen, found chiefly in Ahmedābād, are said to be Hindu converts from the Bhoi and Khārva castes. They are tall well-made and very dark. They form two divisions, inland and coast Māchhis. Both speak Hindustāni. Except that some wear a waist-cloth, the men of both divisions dress like ordinary Musalmāns. The dress of the inland women is a coarse Hindn robe, a tight bodice, and a petticoat of red cloth. The coast or Gogha Māchhi women dress in Musalmān fashion, wearing the headscarf gown and trousers. The inland Māchhis are freshwater fishers; the women are employed as extra servants at marriages and deaths. The coast Māchhis make long sea voyages as far as England and China. When in Gogha they engage in sea-fishing. While their husbands are at home the women sell fish, and when they are away spin cotton. The inland Māchhis are idle and quarrelsome and neither thrifty nor sober. The coast Māchhis are quiet, thrifty, sober, religious, and well-to-do. When he starts on a long voyage a coast Māchhi leaves money with his wife. This she is said to manage with great care and to conduct herself and her house with much discretion. Unlike the inland Māchhis who are Musalmāns only in name, the coast Māchhis, Sunnis in faith, are a religious class, both men and women knowing the Kuraān and being careful to say their prayers. Neither class has any special customs. Each division marries only among its own members and has a union and a headman. Neither class teaches their children either English or Gujarāti, and none of them have risen to any high position.

Chapter II. Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LABOURERS.
Dhu'idhoya's.

Gorkhodia's.

Kathia'ra's.

Mā'chhis.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LABOURERS.
Mapa'ra's.

Ma'lis, Gardeners, of whom there is only one family in Ahmedābād, are said to be converts from the Hindn caste of the same name. These people intermarry with the Gorkhodiās or gravediggers (page 87), and except that they prepare the flower-sheets for the dead do not differ from them in any respect.

Mapa'ra's, Cornweighers, are found in all parts of north Gujarāt. They closely resemble the Maniārs or ivory-workers.

Na'goris.

Na'goris, found in Ahmedābād, Viramgām, Bhāvnagar, Baroda, and Broach, come from Nāgor in Mālwa. The men are big, sturdy, dark, and well-featured. They shave the head and wear a full beard; the women are handsome and fair. They speak a mixed Gujarāti and Hindustāni. The men wear an ill-shaped Musalmān turban, a short coat and waistcloth, putting on trousers only on high holidays. The women dress like Musalmāns in a headscarf shirt and trousers. In Broach they are said to wear the bodice and apron or pairahan in one piece. They are cartdrivers. Before railway times they brought goods and people from Mālwa to Ahmedābād. Now they go only short distances. They are hard-working, thrifty, sober, quarrelsome, and fairly honest. The women work as labourers and sell milk. They are Sunnis in name, but as a class the men are not religious, only a few of them knowing the Kura'n or saying their prayers. Unlike the men, the women as a rule are careful to say their prayers and have generally some religious guide pīr. They have no special customs. They marry only among themselves and form a separate community with a union and a headman chosen by the people. They do not teach their children either English or Gujarāti and on the whole are in a falling state. In north Gujarāt the Pālanpūr section of the Nāgoris is the most numerous. Though they call themselves Khāns from having given up their original profession of cartdriving and taken to that of arms the Pālanpūr Nāgoris still belong to a number of classes, so that, though the whole form a single community, the surnames Kāzi, Mughal, and Sheikh show that they once belonged to a number of classes. The Pālanpūr Nāgoris are very fond of giving public dinners on occasions of marriage, circumcision, and death. So much importance do they attach to giving these dinners that a Nāgori will squander the earnings of a lifetime in a single dinner selling himself out of house and home if need be. If the man himself is not ready to give the dinners the castepeople assemble and force him to entertain them. Thus though a very hardworking thrifty race, few among them are rich or prosperous, being always in the hands of the moneylender.

Nats

Nats, Tumblers, a wandering tribe found in small numbers in all parts of Gujarāt, are converts from the Hindn tribe of the same name. The men are tall, strongly made, dark, and well featured; the women are dark but handsome, their limbs owing to constant exercise being most symmetrically formed. Besides speaking Hindustāni and Gujarāti and understanding the dialects of Mārwar and Kāthiāwār, they use among themselves a curious tongue. They carry about the long low flat-topped matting or reel huts in which they live. The men wear either a common Musalmán turban or the loose philia, the waistcoat, coat, and either a waistcloth or common trousers. The women dress like Hindus. In the rainy season from fifty to a hundred families meet together in some central town, settle disputes, and hold marriage and death ceremonies. After the beginning of the fair weather they start in bands of eight to ten, with donkeys sheep goats dogs and fowls, begging singing tumbling dancing, walking on the tight rope, and performing other acrobatic feats. In these the women take the chief part, and are called kabūtīs, maachhīs, and bhinnāīs, flying along the rope like pigeons, swimming down it like fish, never losing presence of mind. The men play on the drum called dhul. They are hardworking but dissipated and dishonest, and the women are of loose character. Except that they circumcise their boys, bury their dead,¹ and eat animal food, they are Musalmáns only in name, knowing nothing of the rules of their religion, worshipping Hindu gods, and at their births and marriages performing Hindu ceremonies.

Pakhañīs, Watercarriers, from pakhāl or waterbag, also called Machhīs or Waterbag-men and Bhittīs or correctly Bihittīs or The Heavenly, are found in considerable numbers all over Gujarāt. They are said to be the descendants of converts from the Hindu caste of Pakhañīs. There are two divisions, one in north the other in south Gujarāt. The men are short strong and dark. Some of them shave the head and others grow a crop of reddish weather-tanned hair. They wear the beard short. The women are short and dark. At home they speak Hindustānī. Except that they wear the short trousers cholu, the men dress like the poorer sort of Musalmáns. North of the Mahi the women dress like Hindus and in the south like Musalmáns. The men are watercarriers, and make the small reed and grass boats used on the fortieth day ceremonies.² To carry the water skin, north of the Mahi they use oxen and in the south bullocks. The women help the men in driving the bullock. The men are quiet, honest and, except in Surat sober hardworking thrifty and fond of amusement. They are well-to-do. Sunnis by religion, few know the Kurañ or are careful to say their prayers. They have no special customs. Except those of Surat they marry only among themselves, and have a union and a headman chosen by the people. In Ahmedābād they have a meeting-house chauri, where they sit and talk, and hear music. They do not send their children to school, and none of them have risen to any high position.

Shīshahgars, Glassmakers, found in Kapadvanj in the Kaira district and a few in the Panch Mahāls, are said to be converted Hindus. The men are tall strong dark and well-featured, wearing the hair moderately short and the beard long. The women are dark but good-looking. They speak Hindustānī. The men wear a small three-cornered turban like that worn by the Sunni Bohoras of Ahmedābād, a coat and loose trousers; the women dress like ordinary Musalmáns.

Chapter II.

Subdivisions.

HINDU
CONVERTS.
LAROCHERS.
Nats.

Pakhañīs

Shīshahgars.

¹ When a Nat dies, a small spot is burnt in his forehead. This is called dhaga or branding. After the branding he is buried, but without any prayers.

² See below page 157.

Chapter II.
Subdivisions.
HINDU
CONVERTS.
LABOURERS.

They are quiet hardworking and thrifty and, except a few who are given to opium, sober. They make bottles rings and other glassware. The women help them in the work. As a class they are poor. They are Sunnis in religion, some of them knowing the Kuraán and being careful to say their prayers. They have no special customs. They marry only among themselves and form a separate body with a headman mukhi, and a carefully kept set of rules. Some of them teach their children Gujaráti. None have risen to any high position.

Thoris.

Thoris, a wandering tribe, found chiefly in north Gujarát are said to be converted Hindus. Both men and women are tall strong and dark. They speak Gujaráti at home. Both men and women dress like Hindus. In the rains they make small grass or cane huts. They wander about the country in bands of ten to fifty, and deal in bullocks and grain. They are said to commit highway robberies, to steal bullocks and horses, and the women to kidnap children. They are poor and of bad character. They are Muhammadans only in name, knowing nothing of their religion and worshipping Hindu gods. Both men and women lead debauched lives. They circumcise their boys and bury their dead. At marriages the bridegroom pays the girl's father Rs. 200. They marry only among themselves and form a separate body with a headman. They do not educate their children and show no signs of settling to regular work.

makers, 186, well-to-do and thrifty, save money; masons, 193, with well paid but uncertain employment, well-to-do; house painters, 57, with uncertain work, badly off; tinmen, 167, well-to-do; dealers in precious stones, 54, well-to-do; wooden bracelet and comb makers, 1978, well-to-do; dyers and calico-printers and fullers, 566, well-to-do; tailors, 276, work constant but wages low as a class poor; embroiderers, 446, in middling condition, with uncertain work and thrifty habits; paper-makers, 749, well-to-do but work falling off, are thrifty and saving; millers, graingrinders, and huskers, 817, poor and ill paid; bakers and grainparchers, 753, have constant work, are well-to-do and thrifty; sellers of fruit and vegetables, 535, poor but thrifty; grocers, chiefly Shiáh Bohorás, 531, well off; butchers, 751, well-to-do, almost rich; fishermen, 86, poor; provision dealers, 119, well-to-do; dealers in tobacco and drugs, 19, well-to-do; perfume-sellers, 158, chiefly Shiáh Bohorás, well-to-do; fire-wood sellers, chiefly Kathiárás, 377, well-to-do, almost rich; holders of house property, 412, well-to-do; pensioners, 153, in fair condition; beggars and paupers, 4914, poor; prostitutes, 282, in fair condition but extravagant and indebted.

Except in some cases in north Gujarát, rich women seldom add to the family income by their work. Many women of middle class families like the rich, earn no money. But some of them, and almost all the poor, by their labour put something into the family purse. In north Gujarát for some middle class and for many poor women, weaving of turbans, cotton-silk, and brocade is the regular occupation. From this source it is not unusual for a clever worker to make as much as Rs. 3 to Rs. 4 a month. In south Gujarát, where middle class and some poor women embroider and work at chundadi or silk and calico knotting, a clever hand earns as much as 8 annas or a rupee a day. Others sew for wages, and some of the poor make patch-work caps of cotton or silk, earning in this way from Rs. 2 to Rs. 3 a month. Many friendless widows work as day labourers. Women of the cultivating Sunni Bohorás and a few other classes work in the fields with their husbands.

Besides the occupations followed by Hindus and Pársis as well as by Musalmáns, there are some classes of workmen almost all of whom are Musalmáns. The chief of these are musicians and dancers, brass band and kettledrum players, 433; barber-surgeons, 1070; horse breakers chábuk sawárs, 269; tinsmiths kaláigars, 167; bangle-sellers in north Gujarát, 1978; embroiderers and paper flower-makers in south Gujarát, 446; butchers, 751; attár and perfume sellers, 158; and fuel-sellers kathiárás, 377.

Except in so far as they stand in need of their capital, Musalmáns are, as craftsmen, in no way inferior to Hindus. Their special skill in embroidery gives them a monopoly of the art, and the secrets of the lead and silver work known as bidri and of the manufacture of glue, rest with a few Musalmán families and are by them strictly guarded.

Chapter V. Occupation.

CRAFTS.

WOMEN.

MONOPOLIES.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
THE HOUSE.
Rich.

sitting-room baithak, in some cases used also as a sleeping room. The two remaining rooms are set apart for the ladies of the house, one for sleeping the other for sitting. If the house has three stories, the two rooms on the second floor are both used as sitting rooms for the ladies and the sleeping room is in the top story. Some rich houses have separate bath-rooms. But each has its water-room ābdārkhānah, where, on a stone or lime and brick shelf or on a wooden platform stand two water jars their mouths covered with well-polished longhandled brass or copper cups called sarposhes, a ladle dūnga, and several metal cups abkhorās, of different shapes. A house of this description would cost to build about Rs. 2000 and to rent about Rs. 5 a month.

North of the Mahi, the houses are much less large and roomy and are generally two stories high. The walls are of brick and mortar, plastered outside with a red blue or rose wash, and the roof is of tile. As a rule they are built on a plinth raised three or four feet above the road, and are entered by a flight of three or four stone or cement steps. From the fear of being robbed, the old Ahmedābād houses which date from the time of the Peshwās (A.D. 1757-1817) have fewer windows than the houses of south Gujarāt. But in new houses this peculiarity has been given up. In front, supported on wooden pillars and enclosed by a brightly painted low iron railing, is a veranda about six feet wide. The house door is of massive wood with brass bosses. Within it is the entrance-room deodi, about twelve feet square and ten high. From this a passage leads to an open cement-lined courtyard about fifteen feet square with a well and cistern, the mouths of both raised two or three feet above the level of the ground. On one side of the court is the cook-room about six feet square and ten high with an open space above the ceiling for storing fuel. On the other side is the water-place with its stone shelf and earthen water-jars. Across the court, that is opposite the entrance passage, with a small chamber on each side of it, is the public room divānkhānah, used for sitting or dining, and, if there is no bedroom near, for sleeping. From the lower to the upper storey are generally two stairs, one near the entrance door leading to the two front rooms, the other a backstair leading to the two rooms behind the court. Of the front rooms, the largest, about fourteen feet square, is used as a public room and called divānkhānah; the other front rooms and the two back rooms are bedrooms. To build a house of this kind would cost about Rs. 1000 and to rent it from Rs. 2 to Rs. 4 a month.

Except that there is a larger supply and that articles of European manufacture are commoner, the furniture in south Gujarāt does not differ from that in the north of the province. The men's public room maidānah, has its walls coloured generally with a brown or chocolate wash, with arabesqued scrolls from the Kurān and dove-shaped monograms or maddis picked out in black and white as a border and cornice.¹ The flat surface of the wall is broken by niches and recesses. The chief of these, in the middle of the wall about five feet square, is the naukhināh or nine chambers. This as well as the smaller niches are filled with ornaments most of them china plates and bowls. The blank spaces on the walls are hung with pictures,¹ chiefly landscapes, though of late years the practice of hanging up family photographs has become common.² The floor is covered with a country-made carpet, and on the carpet opposite the middle of one of the walls is spread a Persian rug called ghātichah. On this again is laid a cushion or mattress and on the mattress near the wall a pillow. Ranged along the wall on either side of the pillows are sofas chairs or easy-chairs. In the middle of the room is a table with clocks musical-boxes and other ornaments, and against one of the walls a glass-doored cabinet with articles of European glass or china ware and other nicknacks. From each corner of the ceiling hangs a glass lamp, from its middle a chandelier, and if space allows, a gaily cushioned cot jhūla, swinging on bars of polished brass.³ The walls of the women's room, especially of the room set apart for the mistress of the house, are of plain white. Sometimes there are niches or recesses and sometimes none. But always about six feet from the ground a shelf runs round the room furnished with china, glass, and other ornaments. From the ceiling hangs a glass lamp and a swinging-cot jhūla. The floor is carpeted and on the carpet against the middle of one of the walls are set a mattress and cushion. A cot with legs of green and gold, one or two stool-like seats pili, and if there is a child a cradle pālā, of red and yellow or blue lacquer-work, and in a corner of the room a brass lamp filsoz complete the furniture. Except when their walls are filled with copper pots⁴ and plates ranged on shelves

¹ The Surat cement workers or kadias are very skilful in picking out these borders. But many of them are the work of friends.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
THE HOUSE.
Rich.

¹ The prohibition by the Prophet of the possession by the Faithful of pictures and graven images is still observed by the religious part of the Musalmāns of Gujarat. Except to some of the rich and to those who have received a western education the presence of pictures of animated objects in a room not only vitiates prayers performed in that room, but is believed to prevent the entrance of Allah's angels of grace and mercy if a death takes place in the room. Landscapes and pictures of still-life are tolerated, but except scrolls, monograms and arabesques all pictures are looked upon more or less as bid-dati-suyi or evil innovations. Mr. Justice Amir Ali (Life and Teachings of Muhammad, I. 570-573) observes: 'The religion of Islam has been charged with backwardness in painting and sculpture, but it must be borne in mind that the prohibition . . . is similar to the Levitical commandments . . . Its significance rests upon the inveterate idolatry of the pre-Islamite Arabs. To the early Muslims painting and statuary were odious and unlawful as emblematic of heathenism, and this deeply implanted leonoclasia saved them from relapsing into idolatry . . . To Muhammad's prohibition of graven images or paintings in mosques the world is indebted for the art of arabesque . . . and of ornamental writing.'

² Besides the landscapes, which are generally European coloured prints, there are pictures of two kinds: pictures of Persian heroes and Indian celebrities painted in china and given by Chinese artists; and religious pictures, views of Makkah Madinah and the Karbala bought from a pilgrim, or brought as relics by some friend or relative who has done the pilgrimage. Their price varies from 8 annas to Rs. 2.

³ At Ahmedabad in the houses of rich Punni trading Bohoras the shelves are ornamented with rows of much-prized old china cups plates and spurs, made to stick to one another by a cement of cotton, black-earth, and ghee. The shelf ornaments in the houses of thrifty middle class Musalmāns, Punni and Shikhi Bohoras, consist of finely lined and polished copper and brass dishes pots and cups which can command a price, however odd, instead of the brittle glassware favoured by the richer classes.

⁴ Among the rich some families have copper vessels enough to illume a party of two hundred. When they have to give a great feast the poorer classes like the dishes from kindhi and Momna traders or from cooks bhatirdars.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

THE HOUSE.
Middle Class.

most of the other rooms have little but a carpet or mat on the floor and against the wall on one side a cushion or mattress. The total cost of the furniture of a rich man's house may be estimated at from Rs. 500 to Rs. 4000.

As is the case with the dwellings of the rich, the houses of middle class Musalmáns in south Gujarát differ from those in the north.¹ In Ahmedábád the plan varies in different parts of the city. In the Khánpúr Sháh-púr and Jamálpúr quarters they are generally one storied, the walls of brick and mortar and the roof of tile. Entering from the street through a door in the centre of a wall about seven feet high is an enclosed yard from twenty to forty feet square with a well or cistern and in one corner a shed for cooking. The side walls slope upwards towards the back of the enclosure where from a wall from thirty to forty feet high a roof slopes forwards over the yard. The space covered by the roof is generally divided into three or five rooms with a centre hall divánkhánah, having on either side one or two rooms serving as bed, sitting, and store rooms. To build a house of this kind would cost from Rs. 400 to Rs. 600, and its monthly rent would run from Re. 1 to Rs. 3. In the Kálúpúr quarter of Ahmedábád the houses are built on a different and better plan, much like that described above as a rich Ahmedábád Musalmán's house. To build a house of this class would cost from Rs. 1000 to Rs. 2000, and its monthly rent would vary from Rs. 1½ to Rs. 2.

South of the Mahi the houses of middle class Musalmáns are larger and better built. They are seldom more than two stories high. The walls for about ten feet are of brick and above that of wood. The roof is tiled. Each floor has generally four rooms. But unless the family is very large, the groundfloor rooms are seldom used. The stair is generally steep, little easier to mount than a ladder. The first room in the upper story is the men's room mardánah. Besides the men's room there are three others, a kitchen and storeroom, a ladies room, and a sitting room. The floors are of wood or cowdunged earth, and the ceiling of cloth or wood, and each room has at least two windows covered with green or red blinds of coloured bamboo. Most houses have a well. The more used rooms have the floor covered with mats and carpets, the less used with mats only. To build a house of this class would cost from Rs. 1000 to Rs. 2000, and its monthly rent would run from Re. 1 to Rs. 4.

In the houses of the middle class Muhammadans of Ahmedábád and Kaira there is sometimes an inconvenient lack of furniture. In the open hall there is nothing but a swinging cot or two, a cushion and a pillow, a bedstead, and a Persian rug ghúlichah. The total cost of the furniture of a house of this class may be estimated at from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500. In south Gujarát besides several chairs a table and a cupboard, the shelves are ornamented with small bright trays and other glass or china ware. The water-shelf too is bright with a well-polished pile of brass and copper pots, and in different parts of the house are handsome brass-bound boxes. The floor of the women's room is matted. Besides a swinging cot it contains a bedstead with a carpet laid down before it, coat, and a brass lamp filsoz. In the kitchen cooking vessels and pots are arranged, and on the floor is a small handmill worked by the kitchen maid.¹ The total cost of the furniture of a house of this class may be estimated at from Rs. 400 to Rs. 500.

¹ Every middle class Musalmán is anxious to have a house of his own. To live in a hired house in one's birthplace is considered mean.

The houses of the poor in Ahmedabad and Kaira are made of common clay and brick. The framework of the roof is of bamboo. If there happens to be an upper storey there are two rooms; if not there is only one with, up the middle, a wattle-and-daub partition. Each half of the room is about twelve feet long by seven wide. A corner is chosen for the fire-place where the cooking pots, most of them earthen, are kept. The rest of the room serves for dining sitting and sleeping. Unlike those in Ahmedabad the walls of the houses of poor Musalmans in Surat are made of wood or wattle-and-daub. Except that they have a loft machhda, about three feet below the main roof, where fuel and lumber are stored, the inside of a poor Surat house is like that of a poor Ahmedabad house. At the back is a yard bida, about ten feet square with in some cases a well. The only furniture in houses of this class is a cot, a grindstone, a coverlet or two, and a few copper and earthen pots. To build a house of this kind costs Rs. 50 to Rs. 150 and to hire it about 8 annas a month. When now the furniture costs Rs. 40 to Rs. 50.² To own a house is a great object among poor

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
THE HOUSE.

Poor.

¹ In the cities of north as well as of south Gujarāt some old middle class families have a store of vessels enough to dine a party of two hundred guests. But this form of investment is not now in use; even the well-to-do choose rather to hire the dishes.

² The details of furniture kept by different classes of Musalmans are:

Furniture.

ARTICLE.	Rich.			MIDDLE.			Poor.
	Num. ber.	Value.		Num. ber.	Value.		Num. ber.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Scrolls or Pictures ..	12	Rs. 20 0	50 0	6	Rs. 10 0	20 0
Carpets ..	1	100 0	200 0	1	50 0	100 0
Persian Rugs ..	12	50 0	100 0	1	20 0	50 0
Mattresses & Pillows ..	12	20 0	40 0	2	10 0	20 0
Sofas ..	12	10 0	20 0
Chairs ..	12	20 0	30 0	1	10 0	20 0
Easy Chairs ..	12	10 0	20 0	1	5 0	10 0
Round Tables ..	1	10 0	20 0
Sideboards ..	1	10 0	20 0	1	2 8	5 0
Writing Desks ..	12	10 0	20 0	1	5 0	10 0
Marble Box ..	1	20 0	100 0
Cabinets of Glass ..	1	20 0	100 0
Cabinet of Wood ..	1	10 0	20 0	1	5 0	10 0
Clocks ..	2	10 0	100 0	1	10 0	20 0
Swinging Cots with
Beds ..	6	10 0	20 0	4	20 0	100 0	1	3 0	0 0
Mats ..	10	2 0	1 0	1	1 0	2 0	1	1 0	2 0
Copper Vessels	400 0	1000 0	..	200 0	100 0	..	10 0	20 0
China Vessels	200 0	100 0	..	20 0	100 0
Glass Vessels
Glass Lamps ..	12	20 0	50 0	1	10 0	20 0
Candlesticks ..	12	20 0	700 0
Copper Lamps ..	3	20 0	30 0	2	10 0	20 0
Beds ..	12	30 0	10 0	1	20 0	30 0	2	10 0	20 0
Bedsteads, furnished ..	2	10 0	100 0	1	20 0	10 0	2	2 0	4 0
Ditto - Common ..	1	20 0	30 0	2	10 0	20 0	2	1 0	2 0
Horse Carriages ..	1	10 0	200 0	..	10 0
Unfurnished Carriages ..	1	30 0	50 0	1	..	30 0
Handmills ..	2	2 0	4 0	1	1 0	2 0	1	1 0	2 0
Miscellaneous	200 0	500 0	..	50 0	100 0	..	10 0	20 0
Marble Pots	10 0	20 0	..	5 0	10 0	..	2 0	4 0
Total ..	101	1781 0	2704 0	12	131 8	1020 0	12	40 0	60 0

Chapter III.

C Style of Living.

S Sty SERVANTS.

T

Al

Musalmañs. With many families their money troubles date from the time they borrow to build or to buy a house.

The staff of servants kept by a Musalmán with a yearly income of Rs. 2000 or upwards consists of a body servant or valet khidmatgár on Rs. 5 a month with food as a rule; a cook báwarehí on Rs. 8 or Rs. 10 a month; a general servant to clean the house and go messages on Rs. 3 a month and food; a lady's maid máma or áyah on Rs. 5 a month with food; a washerman d'hobi on Rs. 2 a month; a waterman blishtí on Rs. 4 a month; and a groom sáís on Rs. 5 a month. Except in north Gujarát, where he generally receives about Rs. 6 a year, the barber is paid one to four annas when called in to shave. In houses of the very rich or of landholders the barber is also the mashál that is the cleaner and lighter of lamps, and the shampooer of his master and his guests. After lighting the lamps the torchman generally kindles his mashál or torch made of rags rolled on an iron cylinder about a yard long and about two inches in diameter. When the torch is alight the torchman presents himself in the male drawing room or dirán-khána, makes a low salutation salám, and posts himself near the door keeping his torch alight. After about an hour he withdraws and puts out and lays by his torch. If his master has to go out at night the barber who in his office of light-bearer is termed a mashálehí, leads and lights the way. Except in Native States where the right to use the torch or mashál is bestowed as a reward for good service the use of the torch has become obsolete.

The Gujarát barber is notable for the elaborateness of his preparations. After leisurely and noisily whetting his razor on a hone and a leather strop he proceeds to rub water on the head and face of his subject, from time to time dipping his right fingers into a little copper or brass cup. On the wet head and face of his customer he rubs a well-worn piece of cheap Europe or Indian soap. The length of this part of the operation, combined with the delicacy of touch of the manipulator are esteemed so pleasant as to form one of the chief attractions of shaving. The customer with his shoulders and back covered by a red cotton scarf with a slit in the middle for the head, sits patiently with his head bowed before the barber, enjoying with closed eyes a sweet half-dozing repose produced by the rapid motions of the artist's velvet fingers. The customer's sweet lethargy is soothed by the ceaseless flow of scandal regarding the barber's other customers, which glides glibly through his mischievous lips. After the whetting comes the clipping of the moustache and beard, that is shortening the ends of the moustacho, to the strict sharí or legal shortness and reducing the beard to the minimum five-finger length ordained by the Prophet. He next takes a razor and gives it a finishing whet on the skin of his bare arm or leg. In what he calls his kisbat, literally place of art or satohel, the barber carries a sheaf of razors large middlesized and small. He sometimes cuts the English razor in two and gets the pieces made into two small instruments with round lacquered handles. These he wields with a lightness of hand which sends his subject off into a second doze. Not satisfied with shaving the head the barber runs his blade over the forehead the cheeks and the neck of his customer, and even trims and gives an artificial curve to the eyebrows running down as far as the eyelids and taking in turn the hairy growth on the rims of the ears and the pile on the nose. In the case of customers who do not wish to shave the hair of the head, the barber gives the hair on the brow an ornamental arched outline. When the hair line is marked the barber produces his tweezers and plucks out the hairs from the nostrils. After this he hunts out his nailcutter, a small piece of iron about four inches in length with a broad end and an oblique edge. With this he pares the nails of the fingers and toes. Before leaving he shaves the armpits and gives a parting shampoo to his customer's neck shoulders and arms. Besides their pay and keep, these servants, who except the washerman waterman and barber are Musalmáns, receive frequent presents. On the Ramazán Id they get from Re. 1 to Rs. 2; on marriages and other joyous occasions they are presented with new turbans or entire suits of clothes; and, if they are old and trusted, the master meets the cost of their wedding. A groom has a special source of profit in the fee, generally Rs. 2 less 8 annas for the hire of the silver trappings, paid him when he takes his master's horse to a wedding procession. The groom knows that this privilege is distasteful to his master, and therefore generally stipulates for the concession in advance.

A rich Muhammadan keeps a horse, scarcely ever more than one, or a pair of bullocks. Bullock carriages are now going out of fashion as horse carriages broughams and phaetons in the case of the rich, and two-wheeled shigrams in the case of the middle class are coming into vogue. In ordinary years, including the groom's pay, the monthly cost of keeping a horse is not more than Rs. 20 to Rs. 30. The riding horse is also disappearing from among the well-to-do. About fifty years ago (A.D. 1847-1898) with his trained paces, his henna-stained crimson mane tail and fetlocks, and his gay quaint trappings the riding horse formed one of the most picturesque features of outdoor Musalmán life in Gujarát. The trappings, consisting of a white or white and yellow-bordered namda or felt (Re. 1 to Rs. 2), a khogár or saddle of yellow and blue, or red and green, or black and white padded broadcloth (Rs. 5 to Rs. 20), with the headstall and crupper made of stout cotton nivár or braid covered and tightly sewn over with strips of green and red or other broadcloth matching the saddle and saddle-cloth (Rs. 5 to Rs. 10). These set off more gracefully the colour and symmetry of a good horse than the leather saddlery of the European style affected by the younger generation. The martingale is a piece of stout country-made mashru or striped red or purple silk or in the case of the very rich a strong thick Kashmir shawl, tightly fastened at one end to the leather or cotton girth and at the other to the headstall, while the leather stirrup straps on which a pair of small brass stirrups are hung are covered by a piece of creased coloured silk or mashru. The reins were either of leather covered with broadcloth or of braided silk and silver thread. Riding as a recreation and horsemanship as an accomplishment having fallen into desuetude, the profession of the chábuk-sawár or jockey and horse-trainer has also disappeared. The Gujarát jockey was a clever horse-trainer. He not only broke his horse into easiness of pace but taught him a number of

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
SERVANTS.

ANIMALS.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
ANIMALS.

chāls literally steps, which combined comfort and ease with speed. Chief among these was the rahwāl correctly rahūr or the roadster's pace. Aurangzib (A.D. 1658-1707) in one of his letters to his son Prince Afzam (Rukāāt-i-Ālamgīrī, Persian Text, Letter VIIIth, page 5 Cawnpore Edn.) thanks him for the present of a rahūr horse, the easiness of whose paces "remind the old father of the tender solicitude of his loving young son." The rahwār is a pace which combines the ease of the amble with the speed of the trot, the horse being taught gracefully to avoid the jerky movements of both. It is the even run of the Pegu pony combined with an elegance of motion. Another pace is the lāngi in which the horse at each step drops on one of its forelegs keeping the other stiff. A third pace is the langūri resembling the rocking swooping and tossing run of the blackfaced monkey or langūr. A fourth pace is the thirak half-rearing and plunging mode of progression affected by rich young dandies during processions and fairs. The fifth and perhaps most useful pace is the shāh-gām royal-pace or brisk walk. A pair of large bullocks, for small bullocks are below a rich man's dignity, including their driver's pay of Rs. 4 to Rs. 6, cost from Rs. 10 to 15 a month. Except the cow and the buffalo, cattle are seldom owned. One milch buffalo-cow is enough for a rich household, and, unless there are children, a cow is rare. Where a horse or a bullock has to be fed, a cow does not cost more than Rs. 10 a month. Many middle class and most poor Musalmāns own goats. A breed of south Gujarāt goat called patīri is much esteemed, owing to the large quantity of milk (from two to four pints) she yields. The price of a patīri goat varies from Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 and its monthly cost from four annas to a rupee.

Especially in south Gujarāt some middle class families keep dwarf bullocks called geniās. Even in times of high grain prices these geniās do not cost more than Rs. 10 a month to keep.

Some poor Musalmāns rear fowls and eke out their income by the sale of chickens and eggs. Rich and middle class, sometimes even poor, Gujarāt Musalmāns keep game-cocks. The love of gamecocks has developed two fine breed of cocks the kulāng or thoroughbred (Anglo-Indian kullam) and the rezah. The kulāng is a handsome muscular bird with a diminutive comb and sparse feathers above the breast but with stout powerful legs and spurs. The rezah is a smaller but more muscular and pluckier bird with white eyes. A few rich Baroda and Broach Musalmāns have copied the north Indian fashion of keeping game partridges tīlars and quails batēr. The fighting partridge and quail are imported from north India. Thousands of rupees are sometimes wagered on these cock and quail fights.

South Gujarāt Musalmāns are fond of cats. White cats are specially prized as family pets: black cats are dreaded as spirit-homes in accordance with the belief that evil-giuns have a special liking to go about making mischief in the form of black tom-cats. In the same way black dogs are feared especially if they have black or tan marks above the eyes. The cat seems to have been a general pet with the Arabs of the Prophet's day. One of the dearest of the Prophet's companions, who is also one of the most reliable narrators of his traditions and table-talk, was from his great love for these animals nick-named by the Prophet Abú-Hureirah or Father of Kittens, a nickname by which he is more generally known to Islám than by his own name. Among Gujarát Musalmáns to kill a cat is sacrilege. Wherever a drop of cat's blood falls a curse is sure to alight.

Of birds parrots are kept, and are generally taught to speak by listening to the women of the family. The parrot most prized for its quickness in learning to speak is one a little bigger than the green country parrot which has a red spot on the wing. They are called Mohanpúris and are believed to come from the Idar hills in Mahi Kántha. They are caught by Wághris when fledgelings and sold at Re. $\frac{1}{2}$ to Re. 1 the piece. Of country parrots and paroquets those hatched in the ním or Indian lilac tree are much prized as ready learners. Ním-born parrots fetch prices almost equal to Mohanpúris. Cockatoos and red Java parrots (káká karwás and núris) are also cherished as pets. Many north Gujarát Musalmáns have cages full of the red waxbill amaḍavat Estrela amandava or sarkh found round Ahmedábád. The cock is of a fine dark red with whitish spots and red bill and the hen of a grayish brown with orange bill. When perching at noon and evening these birds settle to one another in lines, the males when they are settled giving out a long musical note resembling the verse in the second chapter of the Kuraán descriptive of the unreasoning opposition of the Arab infidels to the Prophet's mission: Summun bukmun úmḡun fahum lá yarjún Deaf dumb and blind they return not (unto wisdom)!

It is the spirit not the music of the cock waxbill that makes him prized. When two cocks are let out before a cage of hens they fight with rare courage and skill. Poor Gujarát Musalmáns, generally fakirs, are fond of rearing the chandúl or Indian lark Galerita cristata and the agan another lark. Larks are kept in small cages which are tightly wrapped round with white muslin. It is said that to keep a partridge or a lark is unlucky. The saying is probably true; for the keeper of a partridge or lark has to spend his mornings and evenings in the fields seeking the insects without which his pet pines and dies. The keeping of a monkey is also said to bring ill-luck and this is why monkeys are kept only by the very rich who own a large stud of horses and who keep the monkey chained at the stable door to house jealous or unfriendly glances: Tabele ki balá bandar par; The ill-luck of the stable falls on the monkey. Some rich Gujarát Musalmáns keep geese and sometimes ducks and guineafowl, but more as curiosities than for food. Gujarát Musalmáns have a prejudice against turkeys on the ground that a turkey's gizzard resembles the liver of a pig. Peacocks as pets are considered unlucky.

Of the monthly expenditure under the general head of House it is difficult to form an estimate. Among the rich and middle classes the house is generally handed down from father to son, and of the expenditure on furniture no estimate can well be made. Under establishment the monthly charges of the rich are estimated to vary from Rs. 30 to Rs. 40 and of the middle class from Rs. 5 to Rs. 10.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
ANIMALS.

Section II.—Dress.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
DRESS.
Rich Man.

Indoors a rich Musalmán wears a cap of velvet or embroidered cloth, or if his tastes are simple of plain cotton cloth. His upper body is covered with a short shirt perahan of fine muslin and his lower is draped in cotton, cotton and silk called ilácha, or chintz trousers.¹ In the cold season a waistcoat kabcha of velvet, brocade, or broadcloth is sometimes worn. Except in the cold season when the rich and well-to-do put on socks, in the house the feet are bare. When he goes out the rich Musalmán changes his cap for a turban or scarf dupatta wound loosely round the head² and over his shirt he draws a coat angarkha tight round the chest, and with rather full skirts hanging below the knee, made generally of muslin, embroidered broadcloth, or velvet, and costing Rs. 2 to Rs. 50. His shoes are of the finest leather embroidered and pointed at the toes. Sometimes, if fond of the North India or Hindustáni dress he puts on the light red leather or green shagreen shoes of Delhi known as chadawous or selimsháhís. The ceremonial dress differs from the ordinary outdoor dress only in being richer; the turban of gold cloth, the coat richly embroidered on the shoulders and back, the shoulder-scarf bordered with silk, and the trousers of brocade or Chinese silk-cotton.³ A rich man

¹ Trousers are various. The commonest is the surkál or tight trouser known as sharí or legál. Loose trousers tammán or gharárdé, though still worn, are fast passing out of fashion in favour of the cut and style of the English pantaloons.

² The turban is chiefly worn in north Gujarát where the dupatta is thrown as a scarf either across the shoulders or round the neck. The turban ordinarily worn in north and in south Gujarát differs greatly. The folds of cloth wound round the edge of a high-walled particoloured skullcap, the whole, but for the thickness of its rim, much like a low-crowned English hat, suits well the steady hardworking citizen of Surat; while the idle would-be soldier-like youth of north Gujarát wears his turban jauntily on one side, its outer coils twisted like cords. In the south the scarf dupatta is the favourite headdress. Except among Sayads, whose colour is green, turbans are white or red. Several Sayads wear peculiar turbans. Some Bukhári Sayads wear turbans of white or green muslin of a dome or cupola shape. Other Ahmedábád Sayads wear white or green turbans varying in size, whose inch-broad folds are wound one upon another with two cross folds at the end. Of the dupatta two kinds are worn, the plain Dhákni and the Banáras with gold borders.

³ Among rich Musalmáns the fashion of dress is changing. The long full-dress robe jama and the loose trousers tammán of the Delhi court have fallen into disuse. Very gay articles of dress, golden turbans and brocade coats, are not approved, and woollen coats buttoned to the neck and patent-leather shoes are coming into use. The details in the text do not apply to all rich Musalmáns. Sayads wear indoors a round white cap, a long shirt, and loose trousers; outdoors they wear turbans either green or white and woollen cloaks sháyah. Men of this class shun show or glitter. Except that the cloak kaba, formerly worn open halfway down the breast, is entirely given up and that the turban is white instead of green, Sháh Mughals dress like Sayads. The newcomer or wildyati Pathán wears a loose cloth or scarf lungi, coiled round his head, the loosest possible shirt, and a pair of trousers very loose above and tight at the calves. The last sixteen years (A.D. 1833-1895) have been marked by a further change in the dress of Gujarát Musalmáns. Among the rich, the middle class, and others who have imbibed the western taint the Indian turban and the angarkha or tunic are slowly giving place to the Turkish or Persian cap and to English under-clothing and the frock-coat. Men of this class whose tastes are not entirely vitiated by western models adopt the flowing skirted coat called the shirwani or the achlan. Innovation in dress has not seriously affected the lower orders or the women. Still even among lower Musalmáns the new taste shows itself in the youth's unstarched collar-like shirt-flap and in the open-fronted silver-buttoned silk waistcoat; among women the chief sign is the tight-sleeved tight-waisted polka or jacket. As regards material the old cool muslins and creamy silks (iláchas and sifis) are giving place to sober broadcloth to soft cashmeres has about fifteen changes of dress one or two of them very costly, the whole representing Rs. 400 to Rs. 700.¹

Rich Musalmans own, and, though against the rules of their religion, wear No. 7 and chiefly Nos. 1 and 2 of the ornaments shown in the list given below. Their value varies from Rs. 5000 to Rs. 40,000.²

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
DRESS.
Rich Man.

and to gauzy shawl. For their under-clothing the men of the liberal school wear English shirts and trousers. These inclined to Arab fashions adhere to the perahan shirt and payjama trousers of white muslin and cotton except that the shirt is longer and that the trousers are tucked at the ankles. The tradition من قتل قوما فهو منهم Man talakalla kauman jahima minhu 'He who imitates a people belongs to that people,' is explained to favour the European costume since it is the style of dress followed by the Turks. Further if it is an imitation of the dress of unbelievers it is at least the imitation of a "People of the Book" (meaning the followers of the gospel of Jesus), whereas the old angrakān and turban was a compromise between the dress of idolatrous Rajpūts and Chaghatai Tartars. Except among rich English-speakers the frenzy of European imitation has not reached the zendnah. Still the half-English half-Turkish theme is in favour and leading ladies lean towards Persian Turkish and Arab models and to the use of English shoes or slippers and stockings. In the matter of ornaments the pronounced tendency is to reject solid gold for pearls and other precious stones. The wearing of heavy ornaments in the nose and ears is becoming less common. The boring of the nostril and cartilage and of the earlobes once held imperative is looked on with dis-favour.

¹ The details are:

Musalmān Dress, Rich Man.

No.	ARTICLE.	CONSUME.			PERSONAL.			TOTAL.
		No.	Amount.		No.	Amount.		No.	Amount.
			From	To		From	To		From	To
1	Turband ...	4	Rs. 0	Rs. 50	2	Rs. 0	Rs. 100	8	Rs. 0	Rs. 100
2	Dupattas ...	6	20	0	20	0	60	8	20	0
3	Shirts ...	15	10	0	20	0	20	21	20	0
4	Coats ...	15	20	0	20	0	4	19	120	0
5	Waistcoats ...	4	5	0	10	0	2	0	20	0
6	Trowsers (pina) ...	15	20	0	20	0	6	30	0	10
7	Shoes (ditta) ...	2 doz.	2	0	4	0	1	21	10	0
8	Shoes (ditta) ...	2	0	0	10	0	2	4	16	0
	Total ...	75	117	0	121	0	21	100	0	100

² The details are:

Musalmān Ornaments, Rich Man.

No.	Article.	MATERIAL.	Use.	VALUE.				TOTAL VALUE.
				Gold.		Silver.		From	To
				From	To	From	To
1	Crest, siqetch ..	Precious Stones and Gold.	Tied on the Turban.	1000	10,000	1000	10,000
2	Perfumed, balayitara ..	String of Pearls.	Ditto ..	1000	10,000	1000	10,000
3	Earring, bell ..	Plain Gold Ear-ring.	Worn on the lobe.	20	30	20	30	10	60
4	Necklace, lantha ..	Precious Stones, Pearl, or Gold.	Worn round the neck.	1000	10,000	1000	10,000
5	Ditto stef ..	Plain Gold Chain or Band.	Ditto ..	200	1000	10	100	510	1100
6	Bracelet, jamanchi or bangin , kada ..	Gold or Silver.	Worn round the wrist.	500	1000	500	1000
7	Ring, angushtari or angulak ..	Precious Stone or Gold.	Little Finger of Right Hand.	200	1000	200	1000
8	Anklet, tola ..	Gold or Silver Chain.	On left ankle ..	200	1000	20	100	510	1100
9	Ditto bell ..	Ditto Ring ..	Ditto ..	200	300	20	10	220	350
Total	4020	31,330	100	280	6020	31,610

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

DRESS.
Middle Class
Man.

Except that the materials are of a cheaper quality, the dress¹ of a middle class man does not differ from the dress of a rich Musalmán. Indoors they are the same. Out of doors the coat is probably of white calico or muslin, and on great occasions the dress is the same as the rich man's but less costly. Most middle class men have from six to eight changes of raiment, the whole representing a cost of Rs. 200 to Rs. 400. Of ornaments a middle class Musalmán owns and wears No. 7 of the list, worth from Rs. 100 to Rs. 200. A few men of this class also own Nos. 4 and 5, worth from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1000.

Poor Man.

At home a poor man has his head his upper body and his feet bare and wears only a pair of trousers made of strong white cloth. Out of doors he puts on, besides his trousers, a turban of fine coloured cloth, sometimes a shirt of coarse muslin, a coat of cheap longcloth, and a pair of thicksoled leather shoes. On great occasions he wears a fresh suit of clothes, and his holiday turban has a gold front. Most poor men have at least two turbans and four suits of clothes representing an original cost of Rs. 40 to Rs. 60.² The lower ¹ The details are : Musalmán Dress : Middle Class Man.

ARTICLE.	COMMON.				CEREMONIAL.				TOTAL.
	No.	Price.			No.	Price.			No.	Price.
		From	To			From	To			From	To
		Rs. a.	Rs. a.			Rs. a.	Rs. a.			Rs. a.	Rs. a.
Turbans	2	20 0	40 0		1	50 0	60 0		3	70 0	120 0
Dupattás	1	8 0	20 0		2	50 0	100 0		6	53 0	120 0
Coats	5	10 0	20 0		2	20 0	30 0		8	30 0	60 0
Waistcoats	2	4 0	8 0		1	10 0	20 0		3	11 0	23 0
Trousers (pairs) ...	8	4 0	8 0		2	10 0	20 0		10	14 0	28 0
Socks (ditto) ... 1 doz.	2	0 0	1 0			12	2 0	4 0
Shoes (ditto)	2	8 0	0 0		1	10 0	20 0		3	13 0	26 0
Shirts	8	4 0	8 0		2	10 0	20 0		10	11 0	23 0
Total	41	65 0	111 0		11	160 0	200 0		65	215 0	401 0

² The details are : Musalmán Dress, Poor Man.

ARTICLE.	COMMON.				CEREMONIAL.				TOTAL.
	No.	Price.			No.	Price.			No.	Price.
		From	To			From	To			From	To
		Rs. o.	Rs. a.			Rs. a.	Rs. a.			Rs. a.	Rs. a.
Turban	1	3 0	0 0		1	7 8	10 0		2	10 8	10 0
Dupattás	1	2 8	5 0		2	5 0	7 8		6	7 8	12 8
Shirts	2	1 8	3 0		1	3 0	4 0		3	4 8	7 0
Coats	2	2 8	5 0		1	0 0	7 8		3	8 8	12 8
Waistcoat		1	2 0	3 0		1	2 0	3 0
Trousers ... (pairs)	2	2 0	3 0		1	4 0	5 0		3	6 0	8
Socks ... (ditto)
Shoes ... (ditto)	1	1 0	1 8		1	1 0	2 0		2	2 0	3 8
Total	12	18 8	23 8		8	23 8	30 0		20	41 0	63 8

orders of Mussalmāns, especially butchers and cooks, are fond of wearing ornaments. Those they wear are Nos. 3, 4, and 5 of gold and Nos. 8 and 9 of silver, costing together Rs. 1600 to Rs. 1200.

Chapter III. Style of Living.

Dress. Rich Woman.

The indoor dress of a Muhammadan woman of rich family is a scarf, a headshawl odni, a bodice angia, a gown pishvāz, a shirt kudta, and a pair of trousers izār. South of the Mahi the woman's head-dress in Gujarāt is the scarf *rumāl*¹; north of the Mahi it is the shawl dupatta or sheet odni. The bodice angia is almost always made of silk, brocade, or cloth of gold, bordered with gold and silver lace. As it is worn with the sleeveless shirt kudta the end of the bodice sleeve is generally much embroidered. The loose long-sleeved shirt kudta of muslin or net is embroidered on the neck and shoulders with gold lace and drapes down to the ankles in full loose folds. Its colour varies; red and light tints for maidens and married women, dark-blue bronze or white for old ladies, and bronze or black for widows.² Of late a new dress, the kudta, like the kudta except that it is sleeveless, has been introduced and is fast taking its place. The trousers izār as a rule are of silk. Except that the trousers are tighter they are in shape the same as those worn by men. Though they seldom leave the house, rich Mussalmān women are careful always to wear shoes. They are of the sort known as mirzā curled in front, high-heeled, and embroidered. As women of rich Mussalmān families are not allowed to appear in public, they have no special outdoor dress. The only peculiarity is that in the rainy season in going about the open parts of the house instead of their ordinary shoes they wear painted wooden sandals khadāmās, held to the foot by a peg of silver or wood slipped between the great and fore toe. Except that it is of costlier materials, the ceremonial dress does not differ from the dress worn at ordinary times. As the scarf rumāl is not considered full dress, the headgear would be the shawl dupatta of gauze with gold or silver lace borders. The bodice is, if possible, more richly ornamented than usual. The sleeved shirt kudta would be of silver gauze kāsh, or of bandarī a cloth of silk and gold made at Bandras, or of plain cloth covered with gold or silver lace. The trousers would be of brocade kamkhāb, or of the costliest silk, and in north Gujarāt over the trousers is worn the gown pishvāz with numerous folds of white gauze.³ A woman of rich family has generally six to ten changes of raiment. This at Surat would be worth Rs. 500 to Rs. 1000, and in the north, where the rich headscarves odni and the folded dress pishvāz greatly increase the cost,

¹ The rumāl is a three-cornered cloth about two and a half feet from corner to corner of gold thread, cotton or silk fringed on one side with a broad border of lace. The odni is an oblong silk or muslin cloth about 3½ feet by 2 feet.

² This rule about colour applies to all classes of women and to the headgear as well as to the gown.

³ Like the ghama, to which it corresponds, the pishvāz is becoming more and more uncommon. In the south the pishvāz is worn by the bride only on her marriage day. When the ceremony is over it is generally converted to some other dress. Some rich and frugal families in north and south Gujarāt preserve these costly marriage dresses for two or three generations.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

DRESS.
Rich Woman.

it would vary from Rs. 1500 to Rs. 2000.¹ Though she would not have nearly all of the ornaments mentioned in the accompanying list,² a woman of rich family would have at least one or two specimens of each class of jewelry, the whole varying in value from Rs. 3000 to Rs. 10,000.

¹ The details are : Muslim Dress, Rich Woman.

ARTICLE.	COMMON.			CEREMONIAL.			TOTAL.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Headdresses, adnis ..	0	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	0	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	12	Rs. 0	Rs. 0
Scarves, ruandla ..	6	0 0	10 0	0	0 0	100 0	12	0 0	110 0
Bodies ..	5	10 0	20 0	10	150 0	200 0	16	160 0	220 0
Shirts, kudits and kudits ..	6	30 0	40 0	0	100 0	150 0	12	130 0	180 0
Trousers ..	0	40 0	50 0	0	150 0	200 0	12	190 0	250 0
Gowns, yashud ..	2	10 0	20 0	1	50 0	100 0	3	60 0	120 0
Shoes ..	1	2 0	4 0	1	5 0	10 0	2	7 0	14 0
Sandals ..	1	1 8	2 0	1	1 8	2 0
Total ..	33	129 8	156 0	34	1035 0	1760 0	69	1131 8	1948 0

² The jewelry details are : Muslim Ornaments, Women.

No.	ARTICLE.	MATERIAL.	USE.	VALUE.				TOTAL.
				Gold.		Silver.		From	To
				From	To	From	To
10	Head Ornament, latlan ..	Strings of Pearls or Gems.	Braided across the temples.	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	..	Rs. 50	Rs. 50	Rs. 100
11	Moon and Stars, chhat-tara ..	Gold Chains with crescent pendants of Pearls & Gems.	Hangs down one temple.	30	50	30	50
12	The Peacock, mār ..	Gold and Precious Stones	Hangs down the left temple.	30	50	30	50
13	Brow Ornament, tika ..	Pearl and Gold ..	Hung from the forehead by three black braids.	50	50	50	10
14	The Earring, pat belli or leaf-shaped earring.	Gold or Silver ..	In the upper rim ..	50	100	10	20	70	120
15	The Thorn, adina ..	Precious Stones ..	Ditto ..	50	200	50	200
16	Ear Flowers, karaphul ..	Ditto ..	In the lobe ..	50	100	50	100
17	Bell Earrings, ghumk ..	Gold ..	Ditto ..	30	100	30	100
18	Ear Ornament, bundi ..	Gold or Gems ..	In inner cartilage ..	40	100	40	100
19	Earrings, bigli-ke-balle ..	Ditto ..	In the outer rim ..	20	50	20	50
20	Ditto murki ..	Gold and Pearls ..	In front cartilage ..	10	20	10	20
21	Ditto dur ..	Jewel Pendants ..	In the lobe ..	50	100	50	100
22	Nostrings, nath ² ..	Gold Wire with two Pearls and a Gem.	A large ring worn in the left nostril.	50	500	50	100
23	Ditto bulak ³ ..	Ditto ..	Worn in the middle cartilage.	20	50	20	50
24	Ditto adina ⁴ ..	Gems or Pearls ..	In left nostril ..	10	50	10	50
25	Ditto bevar ..	A small nath (22).	Ditto ..	20	40	20	40
26	Necklace, chini ..	Alternated Gold & Pearl beads.	Round the neck ..	20	500	20	500
27	Ditto tuksipatta or basil-dev necklace.	Gold ..	Ditto ..	50	100	50	100
Carried over ..				640	2260	10	20	650	1840

¹ Silver is worn by the lower classes.

² A ceremonial ornament worn by married ladies.

³ In Surat the bulak is worn only till marriage or, at the latest, till the birth of the first child. In Ahmedabad women wear it all their lives.

⁴ The adina takes the place of the nath in common use.

In north Gujarát middle class Musalmán women wear neither the sleeved nor the sleeveless shirt kudta and kudti. Their indoor garments are the shawl dupatta or odni bodice and trousers, and, to cover the body between the bodice and the trousers, an apron of red or of white cloth about a foot square. With this exception, save that it is of less costly materials, the indoor and the ceremonial dress of middle class women does not differ from that of the rich. In south Gujarát, as both rich and middle class women are kept always in private, they have no special outdoor dress. But in north Gujarát the practice is a little less strict, and women may pay visits at night with their head and face hid in a sheet chúdar, and their body muffled in the loose folds of the pishwáz. In Ahmedábad the women of the Sunni, and in Surat the women of the Shiáh Bohorás, wearing the long veil or burka are allowed to go out in the daytime. Middle class Musalmán women living in Bohora localities follow their neighbours in this custom, and go out during the day in the Bohora veil or sheet. A woman of a middle class family would have from six to eight changes of raiment. In Surat and Broach this represents a cost of Rs. 150 to Rs. 300, and in the north where the headress odni and the gown

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

DRESS.
Middle Class
Woman.

Musalmán Ornaments, Women—continued.

No.	NAME.	MATERIAL.	USE.	VALUE.				TOTAL.
				Gold.		Silver.		From.	To.
				From.	To.	From.	To.
			Brought over ..	Rs. 610	Rs. 2260	Rs. 10	Rs. 20	Rs. 600	Rs. 1810
25	Necklace, lanthi ...	Precious Stones...	Round the neck ..	200	600	200	500
29	Ditto champ thali ...	Gold and Pearls...	To hang to the chest.	10	100	40	100
30	Ditto mulla ...	Gold ...	Ditto ...	50	100	50	100
31	Double Garland, buldhá ...	Two rows string of Gold Beads.	To hang to the waist.	200	500	200	500
32	Single Garland, achraf kahár ...	Strings of Gold Coins	To hang below the chest.	200	500	200	500
33	Manycoloured Necklace, chín-malla ...	A string of Gold and Gems.	Ditto ..	100	200	100	200
34	Necklace, chan lon-húr ...	Gold and Pearls.	Loose necklace ..	200	500	200	500
35	Armlets, báznaband ...	Plain Gold Band	Over the elbow ..	200	500	200	500
36	Ditto jukingiri ...	Worked Gold ..	Ditto ..	200	500	200	500
37	Bracelets, lasen ...	Worked Gold ...	One on each wrist.	50	200	50	200
38	Ditto ponhouchi ...	Ditto or Silver	Ditto ..	50	200	50	200
39	Bangles, chúti ...	Ditto	Ditto ..	200	300	200	300
40	Finger rings, anguthi ...	Gold or Silver ..	On the fingers ...	20	100	5	10	25	100
41	Anklets, todhi ...	Gold or Silver Chain.	Round both ankles.	500	1000	50	200	550	1200
42	Ditto kadachetrá ...	Thin Silver Bands	Three each ankle...	20	50	20	50
43	Ditto makulá ...	Gold and Silver Chains.	One on each ankle...	20	50	20	50
44	Ditto kamni ...	Gold and Silver...	Ditto ..	50	100	20	50	70	150
45	Ditto petzab ...	Twisted broad Silver Chain with Bells and Rings.	Ditto	20	50	20	50
46	Toe Rings, jodra ...	Silver or Gold ..	Big and middle toe.	20	50	10	20	30	70
47	Ditto bická ...	Silver Bells and Rings.	On the middle toe.	20	5	20	5
			Total ..	2910	7710	157½	485	3067½	8105

5 A favourite ornament.

6 Silver worn by the poor; gold chiefly by girls.

7 Silver worn by the poor; gold chiefly by girls.

8 The middle finger is left bare because of the belief that any one wearing rings on the middle finger is likely to be bitten by a scorpion. The other fingers are at each joint covered with rings and on the thumb is a miniature mirror on the back of a ring.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

Dress.

Poor
Woman.

pishwáz add considerably to the cost from Rs. 300 to Rs. 600,¹ she would generally have almost all the ornaments owned by a rich woman but of cheaper make. The value of the whole set may be estimated at Rs. 2000 to Rs. 4000.

The indoor dress of a poor woman² in south Gujarát is, over the head, a scarf dupatta of coarse cotton cloth, a shirt kudla of cheap longcloth generally worn without a bodice, and a pair of trousers izár of striped country cloth called sisi. In north Gujarát a poor woman wears over her head and face a large sheet-like shawl odni of coarse cotton cloth, a bodice, and hanging from it in front an apron-like flap of red cloth, and a pair of trousers of striped country cloth. Within doors, both in north and south Gujarát, the women of poor families keep their feet bare. Out of doors, for the women of poor families must go out to work, poor women in south Gujarát wear a large sheet pichodi of coarse cotton cloth covering the greater part of the body from the head to the knees. In north Gujarát they wear over their heads and faces a scarf dupatta of coarse cotton cloth. Even out of doors they generally walk barefoot. When they wear shoes they use the long-pointed leather shoe known as nirzá. On great occasions a poor woman wears an embroidered or silver lace scarf dupatta, a new or at least freshly dyed shirt, a pair of silk or chintz trousers, and a pair of shoes. Most poor women have at least four changes of raiment. This in Surat represents

¹ The details are :

Marathi Dress, Middle Class Woman.

ARTICLE.	COMMON.			CEREMONIAL.			TOTAL.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Head-dresses, odni ...	6	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	1	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	10	Rs. 0	Rs. 0
Scarves, dupatta ...	0	10 0	20 0	1	10 0	20 0	10	10 0	20 0
Bodices ...	4	10 0	20 0	4	20 0	40 0	8	30 0	60 0
Shirts, kudla or kuhla ...	0	10 0	20 0	4	40 0	80 0	10	60 0	100 0
Trousers (pairs) ...	1	1 0	10 0	1	20 0	40 0	8	21 0	60 0
Shoes, pichodi ...	1	5 0	10 0	2	20 0	100 0	3	25 0	110 0
Shoes (pairs) ...	1	1 0	2 0	1	5 0	5 0	2	4 0	7 0
Sardars (ditto) ...	1	1 8	3 0	1	1 8	3 0
Total ...	29	61 8	125 0	21	253 0	321 0	52	311 8	650 0

² The details are :

Marathi Dress, Poor Woman.

ARTICLE.	COMMON.			CEREMONIAL.			TOTAL.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Head-dresses, odni ...	2	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	1	Rs. 0	Rs. 0	3	Rs. 0	Rs. 0
Scarves, dupatta ...	2	1 0	2 0	1	2 8	5 0	3	3 8	7 0
Bodices ...	2	1 0	2 0	1	1 0	2 0	3	2 0	4 0
Shirts, kudla or kuhla ...	2	2 0	4 0	1	1 0	6 0	3	6 0	10 0
Trousers (pairs) ...	2	1 0	2 0	1	1 8	3 0	3	2 8	5 0
Shoes, pichodi ...	1	5 0	6 0	1	5 0	10 0	2	13 0	16 0
Shoes (pairs) ...	1	1 0	1 8	1	1 8	3 0	2	2 8	4 8
Total ...	19	12 0	19 8	7	21 0	31 0	19	33 0	51 8

when new, a cost of Rs. 40 to Rs. 60; and in north Gujarāt, from their not wearing sheets pickudi, shirts kudla, or shoes, the cost is less, varying from Rs. 30 to Rs. 40. The ornaments owned by poor women are Nos. 20 23 26 27 and 38 of gold, and Nos. 14 40 and 46 of silver, costing altogether Rs. 100 to Rs. 200. Of these Nos. 14 23 and 26 are in daily use; the rest are worn on special occasions. In south Gujarāt the women of the butcher and cook class, and in north Gujarāt all the lower order of women wear in their ears numerous heavy silver rings and silver leaves pānt, by which the rim of the ear is almost dragged down and sometimes torn. The women of some of the lower classes wear constantly before marriage, but never as widows, the large nosering nath (No. 22), with false pearls or rubies. South of the Mahi, after the birth of a child women cease to wear the small nosering bulūk (No. 23). Except in the case of old or widowed women, bangles are seldom of silver, silver bangles being known as māthīs or evil-ones. North of the Mahi bangles are of glass, to the south of wax and gold or silver tinsel. On great occasions even the poorest woman is careful to appear with a good show of ornaments. If she has few of her own she will borrow or get her husband to borrow. If this fails she will stay at home rather than go in public with, as the saying is, her limbs bare.

Up to four years of age the children of rich and middle class parents, both boys and girls are dressed alike, in a round cap of simple or gold cloth and a loose shirt kudla reaching to the knee. During their first four years the children of the poor, except that the girls wear short drawers, are left entirely without clothes. After about four, that is the bismillāh or initiation time, the boy is dressed like his father, and, except that till she is twelve years old she continues to wear the cap, and until she is married has her gown cut in a narrow slit in front, the girl is dressed like her mother. As they grow up the cost of clothing a child comes by degrees to equal the charges for an adult. But for some years after the bismillāh, or say from about five to ten the cost is less. For a boy and a girl the expenditure is much the same. In a rich family Rs. 200 to Rs. 300; in a middle class family Rs. 100 to Rs. 200; and in a poor family Rs. 20 to Rs. 30.¹ The children of the Chapter III. Style of Living.

Dress.

Poor
Woman.

Children.

¹ The details are :

Musalmān Dress, Children.

ARTICLE.	Rich.
	Common.				Ceremonial.				Total.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Cap	1	Rs. 2 0	Rs. 1 0	1	Rs. 5 0	Rs. 20 0	2	Rs. 7 0	Rs. 31 0
Coats	12	10 0	20 0	1	100 0	160 0	10	110 0	170 0
Shirts	12	3 0	6 0	1	4 0	8 0	10	7 0	11 0
Trowsers (pairs)	12	3 0	6 0	1	35 0	10 0	10	31 0	10 0
Shoes (ditto)	1	1 0	2 0	1	2 0	4 0	2	1 0	0 0
Turban	2	20 0	40 0	2	25 0	10 0
Total	39	10 0	33 0	40	101 0	239 0	53	150 0	237 0

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

poor wear no ornaments save perhaps a votive collar or anklet of thin silver wire costing from Rs. 1 to Rs. 4. The ornaments worn by the children of the rich and middle classes are, before bismillah golden bracelets polonchis worth Rs. 20 and silver anklets kadis worth Rs. 5. These are generally presented by friends on the sixth day after birth. Unless he is the subject of a vow a boy seldom wears ornaments,¹ but girls of rich and middle class families have often a considerable store.²

Section III.—Food.

Food,
Rich.

South Gujarāt Musalmāns are fond of good cheer and good living; those of the north are abstemious and frugal almost to stinginess. Among the higher classes a Musalmān's food consists of wheat bread, and among the lower classes of Indian millet javāri bread in the north and of spiked millet bājri bread in the south, with, for the rich, vegetables mutton fish curds and whey, and for the poor generally one of these articles. They drink tea and coffee. Tea forms the morning drink of the rich and the middle classes; coffee

Musalmān Dress, Children—continued.

ARTICLE.	MIDDLE CLASS.
	Common.			Ceremonial.			Total.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
		Rs. a.	Rs. a.		Rs. a.	Rs. a.		Rs. a.	Rs. a.
Cap ..	1	1 0	2 0	1	5 0	10 0	2	6 0	12 0
Coats ..	13	10 0	20 0	4	50 0	100 0	16	70 0	120 0
Shirts ..	19	1 8	3 0	4	4 0	6 0	10	5 8	8 0
Trousers (qulra)	12	1 8	8 0	4	10 0	20 0	16	11 8	23 0
Shoes (ditto)	1	0 8	1 0	1	1 0	2 0	2	1 8	3 0
Turban	1	20 0	30 0	1	20 0	30 0
Total ..	23	11 8	29 0	15	100 0	167 0	53	101 8	196 0

ARTICLE.	POOR.
	Common.			Ceremonial.			Total.
	No.	Value.		No.	Value.		No.	Value.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
		Rs. a.	Rs. a.		Rs. a.	Rs. a.		Rs. a.	Rs. a.
Cap ..	1	0 8	1 0	1	2 8	5 0	2	3 0	6 0
Coats ..	4	2 0	4 0	1	1 0	5 0	5	3 0	10 0
Shirts ..	2	0 8	1 0	2	0 8	1 0
Trousers (qulra)	4	1 0	2 0	1	2 0	...	5	3 0	6 0
Shoes (ditto)	1	0 8	1 0	1	0 8	1 0
Turban	1	2 8	5 0	1	2 8	5 0
Total ..	11	4 0	8 0	5	11 8	16 0	26	15 8	26 0

¹ A mother often makes a gold or silver anklet for her boy, and at the shrine of some saint vows that if the boy lives to a certain age she will sell the ornament and spend the money in feeding beggars or for the good of the saint's shrine.

² The commonest girl's ornaments are Nos. 12, 17, 21, 23, 26, 31, 32, 35, 39, 41, and 46.

is the beverage of women,¹ middle class men, and such of the poorer orders as can afford it.²

A rich Musalmán takes three meals a day. A seven o'clock breakfast of tea or coffee and sweets: a midday meal of unleavened bread, soup kalā, minced meat kima or kofā, cream malāi, vegetables and sometimes rice, with for drink tea or sometimes sherbat sugared-water: and about seven, an evening meal of rice, rice and pulse khichdi or rice and meat pulāo, with clarified butter and some kind of meat or fish, or kadi a dish made of curds mangoes lemons or plantains, and in some families sugared-water sherbat.

Middle class Musalmáns in Surat and Broach live well. They take three meals a day. In the early morning a cup of tea or coffee with or without a piece of a special kind of wafer-bread; about eleven o'clock a regular morning meal nāshta of unleavened bread and mutton with or without vegetables or cream; and about six o'clock an evening meal khāna of rice and clarified butter,³ and mutton-soup, or pulse, or rice and pulse khichdi, and curds, or mutton-soup or kadi, that is curds and whey, gramflour, and turmeric. North of the Mahi the food of the middle classes is, compared with that of south Gujarát scanty and cheap almost to stinginess. The morning meal is of vegetables or pulse with occasionally a dish of mutton. The evening meal is still simpler, rice and pulse with no relish but clarified butter, and a salad or kachumbar of onions dry-chillies and tamarind-water.

The poor Musalmán takes two meals a day. Breakfast generally about eleven, of millet⁴ cakes fish pulse and water. For dinner, about seven in the evening, rice and pulse with a little clarified butter, and as a relish onions and chillies and water. Except on festivals and at public dinners, perhaps about twenty days in the year, a poor Musalmán seldom has a good meal of any animal food but fish. In south Gujarát where he can easily obtain fresh fish the poor Musalmán lives almost wholly on fish and javūri bread or rice and pulse. He can get a pound of fresh búmās Harpodon nehereus or Bombay-duck for a copper or two or as much of small fry and prawn. These stewed into a thin soup form his daily condiment. The north Gujarát poor Muslim sometimes has a dish of dry prawns cooked in the same way.

Chapter III. Style of Living.

Food.
Rich.

Middle Class

Poor.

¹ Muhammadans abstain from such food as is forbidden in the Korán. These are the blood of all animals, and the flesh of the elephant, the ass, the mule, the hog, animals that eat flesh, and scaleless fish, and such birds of prey as have long talons and curved beaks and animals. Except fish, on whom the name of Alláh is not pronounced when slaughtered, Muslims of the Shífi school such as the Eidsá Sayeds, many of the Arabs, and the Nawáits are not forbidden the use of scaleless fish. Of vegetables Musalmáns eat all except yams. Mushrooms though not forbidden are disliked.

² They drink the milk of the cow buffalo and goat; the milk of the mare and camel is not forbidden. Sugar and milk are taken with tea and coffee is drunk by itself.

³ The middle classes take great care not to waste clarified butter. A small rather deep copper pot set in the middle of a hot dish of rice, or rice and pulse, is kept melted by the heat. Into this pot the fingers are dipped before each mouthful, and the waste of pouring the whole over the rice is saved.

⁴ Indian millet javāri in south Gujarát; spiked millet berri in north Gujarát.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
Food.
Marketing.

In all rich families some articles of food are laid in by the year, others by the month, and a third set from day to day. The yearly supplies are, rice bought in October, wheat in March, millet and pulse in December, and in some cases oil for lighting and cooking and firewood in June. The monthly supplies are clarified butter, salt, tea, and coffee. The daily supplies are animal food, vegetables, fruit, spices, sugar, betel-leaf, and sometimes tobacco. Where opium is eaten enough is kept to last for a fortnight.¹ The middle class Musalmán's yearly supplies are rice, wheat, pulse, millet, oil, salt, and fuel.² The monthly supplies are clarified butter, opium, tea, and sometimes coffee. The daily supplies are mutton, vegetables, fruit, tobacco, betel-leaf, and spices. Except grain, of which all who can lay in a monthly store, the poor buy all their food daily.

Cost.

The daily cost of food in a rich Musalmán family of five persons, a man his wife and child and two dependants, living in comfort but not extravagance, would be on simple articles about Rs. 2.³ The daily cost of food in a middle class family of three persons, the husband wife and child, living in a style of moderate frugality would be on simple articles about 12 annas.⁴ The daily cost of a poor family of three persons, the husband wife and child, would be about 4 annas.⁵

Stimulants.

The only intoxicating drug in favour among Gujarát Musalmáns is opium. In the south it is not in general use. There the opium eater is a marked man, known as the dreamer or lotus-eater pínak, or the bee shehelmakhi, from his fondness for opium sweets. In the north opium is an ordinary luxury and is supplied even at funerals. It is eaten and also taken dissolved in water, and enough for a month's use is generally kept in store. To a rich man, with many companions to share his dose of opium, it costs about Rs. 10 a month; to the middle class man, Re. 1 to Rs. 2½; and to the poor, 8 annas to Re. 1.

Gujarát Musalmáns, women as well as men, use tobacco. The men snuff smoke and sometimes chew, the women smoke and sometimes

¹ The details are: Articles stored by the year; rice half a cart-load costing Rs. 20 to Rs. 30; pulse, 10 mans of forty pounds each, Rs. 10 to Rs. 30; millet, 9 mans, Rs. 10 to Rs. 20; wheat, 18 mans, Rs. 30 to Rs. 40; oil, 3 mans, Rs. 10 to Rs. 20; fuel, eight cart-loads, Rs. 20 to Rs. 40; total from Rs. 100 to Rs. 180. The articles laid in by the month are: clarified butter, 1 man, Rs. 18; opium, Rs. 5; tobacco, Rs. 4; tea, Rs. 2; sugar, Rs. 4; total Rs. 34 to Rs. 40.

² Just before the rains (May 20—June 20) fuel is bought in cart-loads varying in value from Rs. 2 to Rs. 4.

³ The details are: Grain and pulse, annas 8; milk oil and butter, annas 7; animal food, annas 4; sugar and condiments, annas 5; total Re. 1½. Stimulants, narcotics, and other expenses such as betel-leaves flowers and toothpowder misri for women would cost another eight annas.

⁴ The details are: Grain and pulse, annas 3; milk oil and clarified butter, 4½ annas; animal food, annas 2; sugar condiments stimulants and narcotics, annas 4; total annas 12.

⁵ The details are: Grain and pulse, annas 2; oil, ½ anna; clarified butter, ½ anna; animal food, ½ anna; sugar and condiments, ½ anna; stimulants and narcotics, ½ anna; total 4½ annas a day.

chew.¹ Neither men nor women chew tobacco by itself but as one of the components of the betel-leaf. The women of the rich and middle classes in north Gujarāt seldom smoke, but in the south a married woman who does not smoke is the exception. In rich and middle class families tobacco leaves are sometimes bought green and laid in for the year's supply. Before using they are pounded with molasses, and laid in the sun so that any remaining moisture may be dried, then they are ready for the long-pipe hukkāh. In north Gujarāt tobacco grown in Petlād and in Balol in the Kadi division of H. II. the Gaikwār's territories and in Viramgām and Sānand, and in south Gujarāt tobacco of the brand called desūn produced in Kāthiāwār and in Kānam near Broach, are much prized by the lover of the hukkāh.² The rich store a supply sufficient for the year's consumption when the leaf is green at a cost varying from Rs. 20 to Rs. 40. The poor and many of the middle class buy their tobacco with their daily provisions. The yearly cost of tobacco in a rich man's family is about Rs. 60, among the middle classes about Rs. 30, and among the poor about Rs. 6. Tobacco used for chewing with pān or betel-leaf is not the same as that used for smoking. Chewing tobacco is cut a little broader and thicker than English slug or birdseye tobacco. This among all classes is always bought either every day or in quantities enough to last a month. Chewing tobacco is known as suka dry or zarda yellow, and that cut at Surat and Banāras is much prized. Snuff is bought either daily or monthly, snuff from Viramgām in the Ahmednād district being in the greatest request.

In a rich or middle class household, for the ordinary every-day meal, the whole family meet in one of the rooms of the ladies' apartments, and with a servant to bring the dishes and wait, men and women eat together. In poor families where the woman has to wait, the men generally dine first and the woman after the men have dined. As a rule only very near relatives are allowed to dine with the family. But as a mark of special trust well tried friends are sometimes allowed to share the privilege. The room is made ready for dinner by laying a white coloured or printed cloth called das'ar-khān over a part of the carpet and by setting a china or earthenware cup and plate with one or two spoons, a metal bowl or glass tumbler to drink from, and a napkin for each party. Fruit is laid beside the cups and plates. When dinner is ready the party sit down on cushions ranged round the cloth or on the carpeted floor. The host first seats himself at the head of the cloth, the rest of the family taking their places according to choice. Before eating a brass or silver ewer with a basin is handed round by a servant, each person holding his hands over the basin on

Chapter III. Style of Living.

Food.
Stimulants.

Meals.

¹ The Urdu proverb says: Tobacco is smoked by the lover (that is by men) eaten by the beloved (that is by women) and stuffed into the fogey's nostrils.

² The hukkāh consists of three parts: (1) The chi'am or earthen pipe-head which contains fire and tobacco; (2) the stem with the suka called uzīka on which the pipe-head is fixed; and (3) the pipe-bowl which contains water. Pipe-heads for which Kāthiāwār is famous cost from 1 anna to Rs. 5. Pipe-stems for the manufacture of which Surat and Lakhnau are famous cost from annas 8 to Rs. 5. Pipe-bowls for which Delhi and Murādābād in north and Bālar in south India are famous cost from Rs. 5 to Rs. 50.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.

Food.
Meals.

which water is poured and flows into the basin. After this the more religious before each monthful, and the less religious before the first monthful, say the word Bismillāh that is In the Name of God. Then the dishes are handed round by a servant or passed round each guest helping himself. A water-jar stands on the cloth and the guests fill their cups from it as they need. At the close the servant again brings round the ewer and basin and hands are washed. The children are generally the first to leave; the elders both men and women if they have no special business, sit smoking or chewing betel-leaf. Among many families meals, especially dinner, are merry with much talk and laughter.

Feasts.

In honour of a friend's coming or going, or of any great domestic event, private feasts are given. At these entertainments, in which only men join, a number of dishes are ranged in order on a white cloth spread in the middle of the hall divānkhānn. The guests help themselves to any dish within easy reach. Talk goes on during the whole time. When dinner is over the guests retire to some room where long-pipes and betel leaf pān are served. After about half an hour's stay the guests leave, each as he goes being served with ālār or rose essence and flowers by the host. The expense of a private feast, where there are at least ten different dishes and as many guests, is not more than Rs. 20.

Public
Dinners.

Gujarāt Musalmāns are fond of giving public dinners. Among the rich almost every important family event from birth to death is an excuse for a public dinner. Though they are by no means required to do so by law, the middle and even the poor classes show, especially at marriages and deaths, a most keen and ill-judged rivalry in giving large and costly feasts. Muhammadians ask to their public feasts the men women and children of their relations friends and acquaintances. When he has to give a public dinner, a Musalmān, after consulting his family and friends, draws up a list of guests to be asked and fixes the day and the time of the day when the feast is to be given. When this is settled the head of the house hires an inviter izni, to ask the men, and the mistress hires a woman, generally a fisherwoman kahārni, to ask the women guests. Meanwhile in the host's house supplies are being laid in, a cook is hired, and, in some open spot large earthen jars are arranged for the cooking.¹ On the day of the feast men bring water and fill the jars and the cook and his assistants make ready the dinner. In funeral feasts, either before the dinner is served or after the guests are seated, a thanksgiving and prayer, that the merit of the feast may pass to the soul of the dead are repeated, generally by a priest. At the hour named for the feast, the guests begin to come, some of them bringing their boys of any age and their girls up to seven years old. But taking children of tender age and girls to public dinners is not considered good taste. As the guests arrive they are seated on chairs or benches near the entrance to the house. When a party of fifteen or twenty have come, they are asked by the host or some of his friends to walk in. Giving his shoes in charge of his servant, or if he has no servant taking them himself under his left arm sole to sole, each guest seats himself placing his shoes by his side. As soon as the guests are seated, a servant or friend of the host brings in a number of sweet dishes of saffroned rice with almonds and sultāna raisins zarda or musadfar the same dish with a richer seasoning and with the addition of limejuice causing a delicious sub-acidity of taste. After the dishes are served, the guests wait the coming of the host or of some one on his part to tell them to begin. This he does by saying in a loud voice Bismillāh In the Name of God, the guests respond Bismillāh, and begin. As soon as the course of sweets is over, the principal dish which is generally saffroned rice with mutton biryāni, and some mutton or mutton and vegetable soup, or curds, is served in a large copper tray, one for every four guests. When emptied the tray is filled from supplies carried about by friends of the host. In most cases water is ladled round in earthen cups by boys, neighbours' sons, who go about Pāni Pāni Water Water. After a guest has dined he rises and washes his hands. In some houses a person with a tray full of made rolls of betel-leaf pān, stands near the door and presents one to each guest as he leaves. The women travelling in carriages, arrive sooner than the men, and go at once to the women's quarters. They while away the time in talking with the hostess or their friends till dinner is served in the women's rooms. This is done by the servants and friends of the host carrying trays of sweets and other food to the staircase. Here the trays are taken by the women of the family or by servants, who place them in order on a long piece of cloth spread in the middle of the room. After all the trays have been set out the hostess asks her guests to seat themselves, and saying Bismillāh, they begin to eat. During dinner the talk is chiefly of marriage and other domestic events. The dinner generally lasts from half an hour to an hour. When it is finished the guests rise, wash their hands, take a roll of betel-leaf, and smoke. This over, they ask leave, send for their carriages, embrace the hostess, salute her, and go.

¹ The whole cooking is done by professional Musalmān cooks khattārs or bdmarchis.

There are three chief classes of Gujarāt Musalmān public dinners, biryāni, dāl bhāt and khatta, and pulāo. Of these the first and best, chosen regardless of cost by all Musalmān dinner-givers, is biryāni with zarda. Biryāni is the chief dish, saffroned rice with mutton, eaten with curds or some mutton and vegetable soup.¹ It is accompanied by zarda or saffroned and sugared rice with sultāna raisins and almonds. A richer sweet dish is musadfar shola, saffroned rice slightly acidulated with limejuice, and having more sugar sultāna raisins

Chapter III Style of Living.

Food.
Public
Dinners.

¹ The cost of a biryāni dinner with zarda, musadfar shola, or śādwāni mithāi for a company of eighty men is: For biryāni, mutton Rs. 8, rice Rs. 5, soup Rs. 6, saffron Rte. 1, clarified butter Rs. 6, spices Rte. 2; total Rs. 22. For zarda, rice Rs. 2, clarified butter Rs. 2, saffron annas 8, sultāna raisins and almonds Rte. 1, sugar Rs. 4; total Rs. 9½. For musadfar shola, rice Rte. 2, clarified butter Rs. 3, sugar Rs. 6, saffron Rte. 1, limes annas 4, sultāna raisins almonds rosewater and spices Rs. 1½; total Rs. 13½. For śādwāni mithāi Rs. 50. Fuel in all cases Rte. 1 and the cook's wages in all cases annas 8, with a meal.

Chapter III.
Style of Living.
Cha: Food.
yle Public
Dinners.

and almonds, and a sauce of clarified butter. If not by one of these two dishes, biryani is accompanied by sáhwani mithdi the seven sweets, specially ordered from a confectioner, generally in south Gujarát a Shiáh Bohora, whose cookery is famous for its flavour and delicacy. This being the best and dearest of sweet dishes adds much to the costly character of the dinner. The next kind of dinner is dál bhát and khatta,¹ that is pulse rice and tamarind soup. This is the next most costly dinner to biryani. Though not dear in itself it causes a very great outlay and almost a waste of clarified butter, which from earthen jars called bádís is poured without stint till the guest asks the person serving to stop. The sweet dish accompanying it is rice and sugar chobi, and a large quantity of clarified butter. The last class of dinner is rice and mutton puláo,² and some vegetable soup. If there is no mutton the dish is called korma and is thought mean.³ Along with it saffroned rice zarda is served.

Feast Day
Dinners.

Almost every feast-day and holiday has its own dish, and on Thursdays there is generally something special for the evening meal. This is a cheap dish of rice and pulse curry, not costing more than 8 annas for a family of a man and wife with one child and a servant. Of holidays that have special dishes, the 5th of Muharram, the first month of the Musalmán year is the first. The dish for this day is rice and curds with milk, sugared-water sherbat, and fried bread and sugar chungás. It costs at least eight annas a head. The thirteenth of the second month Safar is the Musalmán picnic-day, and has its fried pastry talan, costing about one rupee a head. The first twelve days of the third month Rabi-ul-awwal are held sacred on account of the death of the Prophet, sermons are preached and after the sermons several monthfuls of rice and meat biryani, or rice and milk pudding khír, or pinched and sweetened rice pawwá, are distributed among the congregation. The expense to the person giving these sermon-dinners varies from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50. The eleventh of the fourth month Rabi-ul-Akhir has its feast of pounded and sugared bread malida, costing about four annas a head. On the last Friday of the seventh month Rajjab families who have made a vow to do so, give a dinner of rice curds and sugar served in earthen pots, and known as the pot-dinner khándás. The friends and relations that are asked to this family feast, eat from the pots, and after they have eaten, layers of fresh rice curds and sugar are put into the pots and beggars and poor people are fed from the same vessels. The dinner costs from ¹ The details for a dál bhát and khatta dinner for eighty guests are: Pulse Rs. 2, rice Rs. 5, clarified butter Rs. 10, tamarind and spices Rs. 1; total Rs. 18. For chobi, rice Rs. 1, sugar Rs. 2, clarified butter Rs. 3, almonds Rs. 2; total Rs. 8, with annas 8 for the cook and Rs. 1 for fuel. Total for both Rs. 37½.

² The details for a puláo dinner are: Clarified butter Rs. 6, rice Rs. 5, mutton Rs. 2½, soup Rs. 6; total Rs. 18½, with Rs. 1½ for the cook and fuel and Rs. 9½ for zarda. Total Rs. 20½.

³ The details of a korma dinner are: Rice Rs. 6, clarified butter Rs. 1½, gram-pulse annas 8, spices annas 8, soup Rs. 6, fuel annas 8, cook annas 8. Total Rs. 16½.

Rs. 5 to Rs. 10. On the evening of Shab-barât, the night of the thirteenth day of the eighth month Shaaban, bread and sweets chapâtis and halwa, costing about Rs. 4 are made and given to relations. During the ninth month Ramazân or month of fasting, as both meals are taken at night, leavened bread, because light and easy of digestion and a number of cooling dishes are used. The first of the tenth month Shawwâl is the first of the two great feasts of the year, and has its shir-khurma (literally milk and dates), a dish of milk dates raisins and vermicelli, mutton-soup, and bread, costing about eight annas a head. On the tenth of Zil Hajj the twelfth month, the Bakr Id, literally cow-feast, goats and cows are sacrificed and presents of their flesh made among friends and relations and dressed into several dishes and eaten. In the cold weather as appetisers and tonics, certain dishes are very generally taken. Of these in north Gujarât, a dish chiefly of garlic, and in the south one made of fenugreek seed metki-ki-khichdi, are the chief. A favourite hot-weather dish is thin wheat or rice cakes with mango juice, and in north Gujarât khirai Mimusops hexandra berries and curds. The favourite cold-weather dish is in south Gujarât a stew of potatoes French-beans and mutton, eaten with wheat bread and washed down by unfermented palm juice nira. The cost in both cases is about one rupee a head.

Chapter III. Style of Living.

Food.
Feast Day
Dinners.

Cha style

CHAPTER IV.

DAILY LIFE.

Chapter IV.
Daily Life.
MEN.

A MUHAMMADAN should begin the day by rising at the morning call to prayer, washing, and saying his prayers, either at home, or, and this has the higher approval of the Prophet, in the mosque with the congregation of his brother-Moslims. Very few of the rich begin their day in this way. Rising about seven, a rich man washes his face hands and feet, takes his cup of tea or coffee, and sits smoking and eating betel-leaf, reading, or gossiping with his friends. About eleven he orders breakfast, unleavened wheat-bread, mutton or vegetable and mutton soup and cream, with sometimes a dish of rice with some pickle relish or cheese, and a dessert of mangoes plantains or any fruit that is in season. When breakfast is over, he has his pipe for half an hour, and if there is business to do he attends to it. If the day is an idle one, he sleeps for an hour or two, and later, when the heat is passing, makes ready for a drive, a ride, or a walk. On his return from exercise, about seven, he has his supper, a dish of rice, or pulse and rice with mutton and vegetable soup, or minced meat pickle and wafer-biscuits, and fruit or sweets, and after smoking a pipe talks with friends or with the women of the family, till he goes to rest about eleven. Where the head of a rich or middle class family takes opium, he eats it, or drinks it dissolved in water, about seven in the morning, when he has usually some friends with him.

There is in many ways much sameness in the daily lives of middle class Musalmāns. He is up early to say his morning prayers and go through his religious washing. He comes back to a cup of tea or coffee, and smoking a pipe, reads, looks after his private affairs, or pays or receives visits for two or three hours. By eleven o'clock breakfast is ready. After breakfast he generally goes out, stopping at business till five or six in the evening. In north Gujarāt between four o'clock and dinner time, those addicted to opium have a second dose of it, their friends coming in and smoking and talking for an hour. When evening prayers are over he takes his supper, passing the rest of his time in chess backgammon or talk, till about eleven o'clock he retires to rest.

A poor Musalmān rises early, goes through his religious washing, attends morning prayers, and every Friday bathes at the mosque or at home. After prayers he goes to market to buy provisions. He breakfasts at eleven, and after smoking a pipe, goes to his work, where he stays till evening. On his return he dines and spends the rest of the evening with friends or smoking by himself, and about cleven after saying his fifth or last prayer goes to rest. This routine is broken by Fridays, holidays, and times of family joy or mourning. Of holidays and ceremonial days some account is given below. To almost all Musalmáns Friday is a day of rest. After bathing and attending the holiday prayer and sermon at the mosque, he takes his breakfast, generally somewhat better than the every-day meal, and returns to the mosque to hear the noonday prayers and a sermon. Most spend the afternoon in resting and the evening in driving or walking. At night they again attend prayers in the mosque, and, if they can afford it, end the day with a somewhat richer meal than usual.

Even where there are no children, as almost every family has its poor relations and dependants, the rich Musalmán woman's life is seldom dull or lonely. The mornings are passed at the toilet and except in very rich families, in seeing that breakfast is properly prepared. After breakfast most women rest for an hour or two and then sew, embroider, talk, and amuse themselves with chess backgammon and other games till, in the afternoon, visits are paid and received. Then supper has to be got ready and the time between supper and rest passes in talk, or in hearing or reading tales and romances, chiefly Urdu religious and love stories. If there are children, especially young children, most of the day is passed in looking after them. Except that more of it is spent in household work, cooking needlework and embroidery, the life of a middle class woman differs but little from that of a rich woman. Some of them embroider and sew articles for sale, disposing of them by the help of old women, who are paid a small sum for the trouble of hawking them. In north Gujarát middle class and even rich women weave and spin cotton yarn, work being brought to them by Vániás, who cry about in the streets offering work, the women notwithstanding zenánah or seclusion rules, themselves making their bargains. In poor families the women are at work by dawn grinding corn, bringing water, and preparing breakfast. Between meals they sew for home or for sale patchwork quilted caps of cotton and silk, or in north Gujarát they weave.¹ A woman sups when her husband has finished his meal and soon after, having washed her pots and dishes and cooking utensils, goes to rest.

Chapter IV.

Daily Life.

MEN.

WOMEN.

¹ The articles woven by women are turbans and waistcloths dhotis of silk, ildah and masári, and gold brocade. They are paid for the first from Rs. 2 to Rs. 4, the labour of at least ten days, and for the second and third from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20, the labour of a month or six weeks.

CHAP

OCCUP

Ch
tyl'Chapter V.
Occupation.

THE following statement shows that while there are few engaged, their chief occupations are cultivating, lab

CENSUS
DETAILS,
1872.

GUJARAT MUS

No.	CLASS.	SUBT.		BROCH.
		Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.
Class I.—Public Service.
1	Government Servants	1124	...	893	...
		1124	...	893	...
Class II.—Professions.
2	Religion and Charity	192	...	217	...
3	Education and Literature	627	...	21	...
4	Law	6	...	2	...
5	Medicine	30	...	15	...
6	Fine Arts, chiefly Painting and Music ...	90	...	19	...
7	Mechanics	2
	Total ...	847	...	274	...
Class III.—Private Service.
8	Servants { Domestic	341	...	291	...
9	Others	455	...	133	...
10	Barbers	462	...	52	...
11	Washermen	75
12	Water-carriers	63	...	3	...
13	Miscellaneous	10
	Total ...	1406	...	479	...
Class IV.—Land.
14	Cultivators { Proprietor	206	...	4019	...
15	Tenant	3246	...	10,793	...
16	Labourers, Field	540	...	669	...
17	Ditto Others	1113	...	1119	...
18	Horsebreakers	32	...	14	...
	Total ...	5197	...	16,614	...
Class V.—Trade.
19	Conveyance of Persons and Goods ...	1130	...	143	...
20	General Shopkeepers	1
21	Merchants and Traders	255	...	43	...
22	Commercial Agents and Employés ...	78	...	59	...
23	Miscellaneous	8
	Total ...	1472	...	245	...

* No similar details are

TER V.

ATION.

professions, trades, or crafts in which Musalmáns are not ouring, pressing oil, spinning cotton, and trading:

ATMANS, 1872.^o

Chapter V.
Occupation.

CENSUS
DETAILS,
1872.

KARL.		PANCH MAHALS.		AHMEDABAD.		TOTAL.		TOTAL.
Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.
1260	...	533	...	1632	...	5442	...	5442
1260	...	533	...	1632	...	5442	...	5442
216	...	69	...	500	...	1200	...	1200
11	...	33	...	123	...	718	...	718
28	9	...	45	...	45
12	...	6	...	21	...	82	...	82
31	...	29	...	264	...	433	...	433
...	...	82	81	...	81
391	...	218	...	922	...	2562	...	2562
247	...	267	...	551	...	1697	...	1697
102	...	160	...	149	...	999	...	999
101	...	87	...	368	...	1070	...	1070
7	...	12	...	243	...	337	...	337
2	...	13	81	...	81
...	1	...	11	...	11
459	...	539	...	1312	...	4193	...	4193
9418	...	412	...	1781	...	15,896	...	15,896
3805	...	508	...	4353	...	22,792	...	22,792
276	...	43	...	324	...	1952	...	1952
1511	...	141	...	3891	...	7805	...	7805
53	170	...	269	...	269
15,093	...	1194	...	10,616	...	48,714	...	48,714
123	...	623	...	595	...	2614	...	2614
36	...	135	...	17	...	189	...	189
314	...	421	...	912	...	1075	...	1075
62	...	53	...	185	...	427	...	427
1	6	...	14	...	14
526	...	1232	...	1744	...	4968	...	4968

available for later figures.

Chapter V.
Occupation.

CENSUS
DETAILS,
1872.

GUJARAT MUSAL

No.	CLASS.	SURAT.		DROCH.
		Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.
Class VI.—Crafts.
21	Indigo Dyers	30	...	26	...
25	Vegetable Oil Makers and Sellers ...	439
26	Manufacturers and Dealers in animal produce	7	...	210	...
27	Cottoncaneers, Spinners, and Weavers ...	2340	...	120	...
28	Silk Spinners and Weavers	345	...	640	...
29	Hemp and Flax Spinners and Dealers ...	4	...	93	...
30	Bricklayers	99	...	121	...
31	Stonemasons and Brickmakers	31
32	Carpenters	9	...	34	...
33	Housepainters and Decorators	12
34	Dealers in Iron and Hardware	98
35	Wooden Broomlet and Comb Makers ...	1292	...	370	...
36	Wiredrawers, Tinner, and Electroplaters..	83
37	Gold and Silver Smiths	14	...	23	...
38	Jewellers and Dealers in Precious Stones...	4
39	Calico-Printers	24
40	Calenders, Fullers, and Dyers	222
41	Tailors	122	...	61	...
42	Embroiderers, Gold-lace Makers and Sellers of Artificial Flowers	445
43	Printers and Booksellers	124
44	Millers, Grinders, and Huskers of Grain...	5
45	Bakers and Parchers of Grain	119	...	38	...
46	Sellers of Fruit and Vegetables	23	...	37	...
47	Grocers and Dealers in Preserves	91	...	10	...
48	Makers, Refiners, and Sellers of Sugar
49	Confectioners	8	...	164	...
50	Butchers and Meat Sellers	316	...	30	...
51	Fishermen and Fishmongers	25
52	Provision Dealers	26
53	Sellers of Intoxicating Drugs	2
54	Sellers of Perfumes and Medicines	39
55	Firewood Sellers	76
56	Miscellaneous	767	...	195	...
Total ...		17,286	..	20,685	...
Class VII.—Miscellaneous.
57	Rent Receivers	84	...	165	...
58	Pensioners	69	...	22	...
59	Beggars and Paupers	953	...	786	...
60	Wives and Mothers	16,879	...	18,836
61	Boys	7366	...	18,404	...
62	Girls	9321	...	11,750
63	Prostitutes	103	...	22
Total ...		25,749	26,303	35,062	30,608

MUSALMANS.

MANS, 1872—continued.

Chapter V.
Occupation.CENSUS
DETAILS,
1872.

KATRA.		PANCH MAHALS.		AMMEDNID.		TOTAL.		TOTAL.
Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.	Men.	Women.
1	7	...	64	...	64
1296	...	190	...	959	...	2581	...	2581
30	...	1	...	190	...	438	...	438
1473	...	53	...	4207	...	8193	...	8193
...	...	64	...	164	...	1213	...	1213
...	...	3	...	21	...	129	...	129
163	...	15	...	70	...	471	...	471
35	...	57	...	40	...	193	...	193
67	...	42	...	31	...	186	...	186
15	30	...	57	...	57
32	72	...	202	...	202
141	117	...	1978	...	1978
36	...	8	...	40	...	167	...	167
25	...	1	...	16	...	79	...	79
...	...	13	...	37	...	54	...	54
20	...	1	45	...	45
41	...	2	...	192	...	457	...	457
5	85	...	276	...	276
...	1	...	446	...	446
20	...	10	...	595	...	749	...	749
...	...	11	...	1	...	17	...	17
72	...	21	...	503	...	753	...	753
16	...	23	...	436	...	535	...	535
5	...	260	...	165	...	531	...	531
...	10	...	10	...	10
...	...	21	...	10	...	203	...	203
138	...	16	...	252	...	751	...	751
10	...	2	...	49	...	86	...	86
5	...	78	...	10	...	119	...	119
...	...	6	...	11	...	19	...	19
27	...	14	...	78	...	158	...	158
3	...	23	...	275	...	377	...	377
329	...	183	...	1265	...	2739	...	2739
21,614	...	4868	...	26,228	...	90,711	...	90,711
87	...	1	...	75	...	412	...	412
9	...	2	...	61	...	153	...	153
659	...	165	...	2351	...	4914	...	4914
...	21,975	...	4525	...	27,555	...	89,770	89,770
14,370	...	2907	...	13,030	...	50,986	...	60,986
...	11,936	...	2322	...	11,777	...	47,305	47,305
...	42	...	8	...	107	...	282	282
36,778	33,952	7843	7055	41,745	39,439	147,176	137,357	284,533

Chapter V.
Occupation.

The following details give some idea of the general condition of these different classes.

GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

In Government service there are 5442, chiefly soldiers, police-messengers, postmen, and some clerks and schoolmasters. Except a few higher officers in the police, revenue, and judicial branches of the service, many Musalmáns in the lower grades of Government service are more or less embarrassed.

PROFESSIONS.

Of Professional men there are, under religion and charity, 1200, schoolmasters, mosque servants, and religious teachers. Of these the mosque servants are poor and the religious teachers and elegy-singers well-to-do, many of the spiritual guides pirzáddáhs living with much sato and show. Under medicine come 82, chiefly doctors hakims,¹ as a class well-to-do and many of them rich, and a few midwives who are generally well-to-do. Under fine arts come 433, chiefly singers, painters, dancers, and actors. People of this class are careless and live expensively and as a rule are badly off.

SERVICE.

Under Service come 4195, chiefly domestic and other servants 2696, and barbers 1070, who have good and steady work and make money, but being thriftless are generally indebted, and washermen 337, who have constant employment and being steady workers and thrifty save money.

LAND.

Under Land come 48,714. Of the landowners, 15,896, many of them large proprietors are, through extravagance, indebted and embarrassed and their lands are rapidly passing by unredeemed mortgage and sale into the hands of moneylenders. Many of the small landholders, Sunni Bohorás and others, are well off. Tenants, 22,792, are on the whole well-to-do. Labourers, 1952, from irregular work and bad wages are poor. Dealers in animals, 480, except horse-dealers, are as a rule in good condition.

TRADE.

Under Trade come 4968. Of these the chief are Bohorás, chiefly Shiáhs, having cutlery shops, oilman-stores, hardware, and Europe shops. They are well-to-do and thrifty and save money.

CRAFTS.

Under Crafts come 90,711, chiefly oilmen, 2884, who, well paid and thrifty, save money; cotton spinners and weavers, 8193, most on account of decreasing work poor and in debt; tanners, 438, well-to-do with steady work; bricklayers, 471, well-to-do; lime-burners and brick-makers, 186, well-to-do and thrifty, save money; masons, 193, with well paid but uncertain employment, well-to-do; house painters, 57, with uncertain work, badly off; tinmen, 167, well-to-do; dealers in precious stones, 54, well-to-do; wooden bracelet and comb makers, 1978, well-to-do; dyers and calico-printers and fullers, 566, well-to-do; tailors, 276, work constant but wages low as a class poor; embroiderers, 446, in middling condition, with uncertain work and thrifty habits; paper-makers, 749, well-to-do but work falling off, are thrifty and saving; millers, graingrinders, and huskers, 817, poor and ill paid; bakers and grainparchers, 753, have constant work, are well-to-do and thrifty; sellers of fruit and vegetables, 535, poor but thrifty; grocers, chiefly Shiáh Bohorás, 531, well off; butchers, 751, well-to-do, almost rich; fishermen, 86, poor; provision dealers, 119, well-to-do; dealers in tobacco and drugs, 19, well-to-do; perfume-sellers, 158, chiefly Shiáh Bohorás, well-to-do; fire-wood sellers, chiefly Kathiárás, 377, well-to-do, almost rich; holders of house property, 412, well-to-do; pensioners, 153, in fair condition; beggars and paupers, 4914, poor; prostitutes, 282, in fair condition but extravagant and indebted.

¹ The Gujarát Musalmán physician or hakim may be the son of any middle class or even rich family. After learning a little Persian and Arabic he chooses a master ustád, and with him studies the four or five books on Arabian medicine commonly known as Greek Medicine Tibb-i-Yunani. The works generally studied are Mizán-ul-Tib, Munshai, and Mújaz, where as a rule the pupil stops, and begins to learn practical surgery. In practical surgery they are taught the art of dressing wounds, bleeding, joint-setting, and couching for the cataract. Their medicines are almost entirely vegetable. The charges vary from Rs. ½ to Rs. 2 a visit according to professional reputation. The medicine if given by the doctor is charged separately. If not it is bought in the market according to the prescription given. A rich man on recovery, besides the fee, gives his doctor a suit of cloths or a shawl. As a class physicians are kind to the poor often giving them advice and medicine free of charge. They seldom have any knowledge of or practice midwifery, as to admit a male stranger at child-birth would be against the spirit of Islám.

Except in some cases in north Gujarát, rich women seldom add to the family income by their work. Many women of middle class families like the rich, earn no money. But some of them, and almost all the poor, by their labour put something into the family purse. In north Gujarát for some middle class and for many poor women, weaving of turbans, cotton-silk, and brocade is the regular occupation. From this source it is not unusual for a clever worker to make as much as Rs. 3 to Rs. 4 a month. In south Gujarát, where middle class and some poor women embroider and work at chundadi or silk and calico knotting, a clever hand earns as much as 8 annas or a rupee a day. Others sew for wages, and some of the poor make patch-work caps of cotton or silk, earning in this way from Rs. 2 to Rs. 3 a month. Many friendless widows work as day labourers. Women of the cultivating Sunni Bohorás and a few other classes work in the fields with their husbands.

Besides the occupations followed by Hindus and Pársis as well as by Musalmáns, there are some classes of workmen almost all of whom are Musalmáns. The chief of these are musicians and dancers, brass band and kettledrum players, 433; barber-surgeons, 1070; horse breakers chābhuk sawārs, 269; tinsmiths kalāigars, 167; bangle-sellers in north Gujarát, 1978; embroiderers and paper flower-makers in south Gujarát, 446; butchers, 751; attár and perfume sellers, 158; and fuel-sellers kathiárás, 377.

Except in so far as they stand in need of their capital, Musalmáns are, as craftsmen, in no way inferior to Hindus. Their special skill in embroidery gives them a monopoly of the art, and the secrets of the lead and silver work known as bidri and of the manufacture of glue, rest with a few Musalmán families and are by them strictly guarded.

Chapter V.
Occupation.
CRAFTS.

WOMEN.

MONOPOLIES.

CONDITION.

On the condition of Gujarát Musalmáns two general remarks may be made. Those north of the Mahi are more thrifty and better off than those to the south, and the most prosperous, both in the north and in the south, are chiefly or altogether of Hindu origin.

Though less thrifty than the Hindus, the Musalmáns are in ordinary life neither wasteful nor extravagant. Of classes who are able to add to their capital, the chief are, among traders, Bohorás both Shiáhs and Sunnis; among cultivators, all classes of Sunni Bohorás; among craftsmen, oilmen, cement-burners and brick-makers, firewood-sellers, and butchers; and among those engaged in service, Arab soldiers and watchmen, bakers, barbers, vegetable and fruit sellers, and carters. As they are not allowed to lend money, a rule which all Musalmáns except most classes of Hindu origin obey, their chief forms of investment are, for merchants and shopkeepers, trade; for cultivators, land and farm stock; for many of all classes, house property; and for all, gold and silver ornaments. Musalmáns invest almost nothing in Government savings banks and securities.

Cases of debt among the rich are rare, among the middle-classes common, and among the poor usual. A middle class borrower, generally on the security of his house or land, can raise Rs. 500 to Rs. 600 at from nine to twelve per cent a year. With much care some families clear themselves from heavy liabilities. But as a rule a large debt passes from father to son. A poor man who has ornaments or other security may raise Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 at from twelve to eighteen per cent a year. But with only personal security, for the greater risk a bonus is charged, and the rates rise as high as forty or fifty per cent. Many families, especially among weavers and other poor townsmen, are sunk in debt almost beyond hope. But of these a considerable number would seem to be a fair match for the moneylenders, few of them failing to keep back from him, or worm out of him, money enough for their marriage or death dinners, and for building a house or purchasing stock for agricultural purposes.

Impersonal:

CHAPTER VII.

RELIGION.

BOTH the leading forms of the Musalmán faith, the Sunni and the Shiáh, are found in Gujarát. According to the 1872 census of 993,324 the total Musalmán population 507,440 were Sunnis and 422,793 Shiáhs. Of Sunnis, there are among the regular or part-foreign classes, Shaikhs, Patháns, and some of the Sayads, and about five-sixths of the local or irregular communities. Of Shiáhs there are among the regular classes, most of the Mughals and some of the Sayads, and of local communities most trading Bohorás, the Tús, and many of the Momnás.

In Gujarát the Sunni faith was spread chiefly by direction of the rulers and the Shiáh faith by the persuasion of preachers. The most zealous Sunnis were, of the early governors, Alf Khán (A.D. 1297-1317); of the Ahmedábád kings, Muzaffar Sháh I. (A.D. 1390-1411), Ahmad I. (A.D. 1411-1441), Mahmúd Begada (A.D. 1459-1513), and Muzaffar II. (1536-1550), and of the Mughal emperors Jahángír (A.D. 1605-1627) and Aurangzib (A.D. 1658-1707). The spread of the Shiáh faith, except what it may owe to the Nawábs of Cambay and the Persian refugees at his court, has been due to the success of three great missionaries, Abdulláh (about A.D. 1130) the apostle of the Mustáali Ismáílián or Dáúdi Bohora faith; Kutb-ud-dín (A.D. 1400) and his descendants the Pirána saints; and Sháh Táhir, the Ismáílián courtier-missionary in the early years of the sixteenth century.¹

The original question in dispute between Sunnis and Shiáhs, whether as the Sunnis hold, Abubakur, Umar, and Uthmán were the lawful successors of the Prophet, or were, as the Shiáhs contend, usurpers, defrauding Ali of his right to the Khiláfat, has given rise to several differences in belief and practice. The chief of the differences are that the Shiáhs leave out of the Kura'án certain passages which they say were written by Uthmán; they add a chapter in praise of Ali which they say Uthmán kept back; and to other parts they give a different meaning from that accepted by the Sunnis. The Shiáhs do not believe in saints, and follow the precepts of the twelve instead of the four Imáms.² They claim for their head doctors in Persia, the mujtahids

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.Points of Difference.

¹ In A.D. 1709 Bahádur Sháh (A.D. 1707-1712) emperor of Dehli issued an order that in the public prayers among the attributes of the Khalifah Ali the Sháh epithet wasí or heir should be introduced. This order caused great discontent among the Ahmedábád Sunnis. They warned the reader not to use the word wasí and as he persisted, on the next occasion they dragged him from the pulpit and stabbed him to death. Muntakhib-ul-Lubáb in Elliot, VII, 421.

² The twelve Shiáh Imáms are: (1) Murtuza Ali (date of birth not known), died at Kúfa, A.D. 660; (2) Imám Hasan, born A.D. 625; (3) Imám Husain, A.D. 626; (4) Zain-ul-Abidin, A.D. 653; (5) Muhammad Bákir, A.D. 675; (6) Jafar Sádik, A.D. 698; (7) Músi Kázim, A.D. 745; (8) Músi Raza, A.D. 770; (9) Taki Abu Jafár, A.D. 810;

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.

or religious superiors, the power of altering the spiritual and temporal law; the Sunnis say that the time for change ceased with the four Imáms Sháfai, Abú Hanifah, Málík, and Hambal.¹ In practice some sects of Shiáhs differ from Sunnis, chiefly by counting the month from the fading of the old moon and not as the Sunnis do from the shining of the new moon. They pray thrice instead of five times a day, and in praying hold their hands open by their sides instead of folding them below the breast.² Except these and a few other particulars the beliefs and customs of the rival sects are the same.

Belief.

Belief in the unity of God; in his angels; in his books, the Jewish Christian and Muhammadan scriptures; in his prophets; in his government of the world; in good and evil as coming from Him; and in the day of resurrection, are the chief articles of a Musalmán's faith. A Muslim should pray³ five or three times a day, give a part of his goods to the poor,⁴ fast in the month of Ramazán, and make a pilgrimage to Makkah, and if a Shiáh, to Karbala and Sháh Najaf if he has no debt and is rich enough. Muslim worship consists of a number of bows and prostrations accompanied with prayers and verses from the Kurán.⁵ Each of the five daily prayers has its separate form, and on Fridays and on the days of the Ramazán and Bakr festivals, the reading of prayers is accompanied by a sermon. The funeral prayer is simply repeating several times the words Alláh-o-Akbar God is great.

Practice.

Though as a body not very zealous, Gujarát Musalmáns are on the whole careful to observe the chief rules of their faith. Few of them go to the daily public prayers. But the Friday service is well attended; and crowds join with fervour in the long night prayers taráwih of the Ramazán. Though among Sunnis it is chiefly a time of noisy merriment, to Shiáhs both men and women, the Muharram is a season

(10) Abul Hasan Askari, A.D. 829; (11) Abu Muhammad Askari, A.D. 845; (12) Al-mohdi, A.D. 971. The four Sunni Imáms are: Sháfai A.D. 767-810, Abú Hanifah A.D. 700-733; Málík (A.D. 703-733, died A.D. 735), and Hambal (born A.D. 780, date of death not known).

¹ The four Sunni Imáms have given rise to the four schools the Hanafi, Sháfai, Málíki, and Hambali. Except the Arabs who belong to the Sháfai school, Gujarát Sunni Musalmáns are Hanafis.

² When praying with a jama'at of the Sunnis the Shiáh deports himself according to the orthodox part of the company in obedience to the Shiáh doctrine of takiyyah literally fear or caution. Where the Shiáhs are in a minority they practice this doctrine and while acting upon it they even vilify their own sect if their personal safety requires. Blochman's Alin-i-Akbari, 338 note 2.

³ The Sunni prays five times, before sunrise fajr, at noon zahr, between four and sunset asar, at sunset maghrib, and from 8 to 12 P.M. isha. Some very religious Sunnis say a sixth prayer tahajjud at midnight, and a seventh called Ishrak two hours after the morning prayers. The Shiáh prays three times; before sunrise fajr, at noon when he repeats both the zahr and the asar prayers, and at sunset when he says the maghrib and isha prayers. Some of them say also the midnight tahajjud prayers.

⁴ The poor tax zakat, literally purification, is 2½ per cent on all incomes over a hundred rupees a year, and from the poor seven and a quarter pounds of wheat a head to be paid in the Ramazán month.

⁵ The body of the person praying as well as the place of prayer must be free from anything causing legal uncleanness. The prayer must always be preceded by ablution wuzú, unless nothing that constitutes legal defilement has taken place since the former ablutions. Praying in company at a mosque is considered more meritorious than saying prayers at home.

of the keenest grief and real self-denial. Almost all observe the month of fasting and attend services on the Ramazán and Bakr Íd feasts.¹ All who can afford it give alms freely, and few, except those of Hindu origin, lend money at interest or drink spirits. They reverence the name of the Prophet and the Kuraán and accept the doctrines of their faith. The irregular classes of Shiáhs and most of the Sunnis become muríds or disciples, the former to their mulás and the latter to some religious person called their pirzádah or murshid.² Among the women, a few, chiefly unmarried daughters of Sayads, some Shaikhs, and many of the trading Bohorás, both Sunnis and Shiáhs, are well taught in the Kuraán and other religious books. Many are pious, and, though not allowed to appear at places of public worship, are careful to repeat their daily prayers and to keep fasts and other religious observances.

The vowing of vows is older than Islám and is not opposed to the law of the Prophet. The sacred Kuraán represents the prophet Zakariyah (Zacharias) vowing a vow of abstinence from speech for a certain number of days in return for the promise of a son. The Virgin Mary when advised to betake herself to an unfrequented spot for the birth of her son is asked to give forth as a reason for her isolation from the society of her people the fact that 'she had vowed to heaven a fast not to speak unto men for the day' (Kuraán Chap. XVI.) In Islámic times the Prophet advised his daughter the Lady Fátimah and her husband Ali to vow a fast of three days for the recovery from illness of their sons Hasan and Husain. Vows to fast, to repeat a certain number of prayers, to give in charity a certain sum of money, to feed a certain number of poor, or to found some religious or charitable building or institution are vows strictly in

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.
Practice.

Vows.

¹ The Sunnis hold these services at the Idgáh or prayer-place and at the mosques; the Shiáhs in their own mosques.

² The profession called Pir Murshí or spiritual tutelage is practised by north and south Gujarát Sayads and a few Shaikhs of the Chishtí and Farkhí families. They call their followers murshids. Among the lower classes each class has its pir or murshid and so far do the uneducated classes carry the idea of the necessity of having a pir that be-pir that is pir-less is a term of scorn. Thus the Bukhárís have the Memans and Chishtís as their murshids, the Pirána Sayads have the Momnás and Kákás, and there are Sayads who claim the tutelage of the Gandrap or courtesan class. The Sayad, who is a pir, first initiates his disciples by his inculcating on his follower the Musalmán tenets of faith, by exhorting him to eschew the ways of evil and to obey the sacred law of Islám which constitutes the straightest way to virtue and heavenly approval. He sips a little sherbát or sugared-water out of a cup and makes his disciple drink of it. This is said to be taking the lab or lip-rings of the Pir. The ceremony which is based on old Sufi rites takes place either at the age of initiation four years four months and four days or before marriage or at any time of life. It often happens that the practice of the Pir's life is in direct contravention to the rules and principles of virtue he inculcates, but the novice is taught from the outset that according to the Persian proverb his Pir is the object of his faith not of his imitation: "Pir-i-má khar ast shikhihi mi bar ast Our saint is straw, our belief in him is all." The Pir does not impose on his disciples a regular tax but the income he derives from them is sometimes immense. The disciples always supply their Pir with funds enough, either in cash or grain, to maintain him in decent comfort if not in luxury. Every four years the Pir visits his congregation when his followers are bound to raise subscriptions to supply him with money. The Pir is sometimes invited by one of his people to bless the dying, the bride and bridegroom, or a new house. This also is an occasion for making handsome presents in cash or kind to the Pir.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIAHS.

Vows.

accordance with the letter and spirit of the law of Islām. Such vows are offered only by the strictly pious. On the other hand vows admitting the instrumentality of any person living or dead, whether prophet or saint, are regarded by the religious as idolatrous. The Wahābis are bitter against such practices, denouncing the makers of such vows as little better than heretics. The Hindu instincts and ways of thought of the Indian Musalmān have brought into existence a number of beliefs among which the efficacy of vows offered to dead saints and even to the Zarís and Tūziāhs or the miniature shrines of the martyrs of Karbala better known as tābūts, and to Dūlāhs people inspired by the martyrs have the first place. Such vows are of three classes: Vows made to saints; vows made to tūziāhs, zarís, or tābūts or other institutions of the Muharram; and vows made to genii or fairies or spirits.

Shrine Vows.

Vows are also made to visit shrines of note. At present the shrine of Mīrān Sayad Ali at U'njah in north Gujarāt is the most famous in the province. This shrine has risen to special importance owing to the great faith reposed in the saint by the late Gaikwār Khanderāo, who as a thank-offering presented a railing of solid silver. Since that gift the shrine draws a larger number of votaries than any shrine in Gujarāt. The reputation that this shrine enjoys as an exorciser of spirits is not equalled by any other in Gujarāt. Even the Dakhan and sometimes Rajputāna and the north furnish it with spirit-possessed votaries. As soon as a spirit-afflicted person arrives at the shrine at U'njah the mujādar or warden allots him quarters befitting his station in life in one of the open rooms or outhouses of the shrine. In the evening the patient sits with other votaries near the railing of the saint's grave. He is given a cup of water from the shrine well or cistern, on drinking which, if he is spirit-possessed, the unwelcome tenant of his body declares itself by the afflicted person beginning to nod or see-saw his body backward and forward, or if a woman to toss her hair and roll her eyes. If after one or two repetitions of the draught none of these effects is produced the ailment is concluded to be constitutional. In that case the remedy is the internal or external use of the leaves of a tree growing near the grave of the saint. The tree is said by the shrine wardens to belong to no recognized family or class of Indian plants. It is said to have grown out of a vegetable toothbrush or dātan which after using the saint thrust into the soft ground near him. After a while it put out shoots and grew and gave forth leaves which have served for ages as sure antidotes for all the evils which afflict the bodies of votaries. Its leaves have been known to cure the most obstinate and chronic diseases, leprosy defying the treatment of the ablest physicians, bloated dropsies, and racking rheumatisms. In one case where hopeless blindness was removed, the patient expressed his gratitude in an ode sometimes sung by the musicians and bards of the shrine. Sometimes even the leaf remedy is dispensed with. The patient comes and sojourns at the shrine under the protection of the saint. After a time he or one of his party or one of the wardens is warned in a dream that the patient is well and should go. If the first warning is disregarded a second and clearer dream follows accompanied by the threat of evil if the patient does not leave. The province of Gujarat abounds in instances of the miraculous curing powers of the Mirán. It sometimes happens that the person applying to the Mirán is referred by him to some other saint. Of late many directions have been given to apply to the shrine of the Naw Shakhid or Nine Martyrs at Smat. The spirit-expelling element at the Mirán's shrine is more interesting than the medical. It often happens that a spirit is so obstinate that in spite of frequent punishments and castings out it does not leave or departs but a moment to at once return. Then the punishments inflicted are sometimes as terrible as they are degrading. The man possessed by one of these stubborn spirits is seen being dragged unwillingly as if by an unseen agent to a post where without any visible cord his hands seem to be bound and he to writhe and rave as if under severe corporal punishment. Sometimes the possessed seems to be dragged towards the latrines of the shrine, all the while entreating and praying the Mirán and promising future obedience and abject submission to his invisible masters. His mode of progression has all the appearance of being forced and reluctant. Seeming to be dragged to the urinaries or latrines he is immersed into the impurities and made to wallow in them. At last when he gives a faithful promise of future good conduct and when the fit is exhausted he removes himself from the place often with a shoe between his teeth as a sign of abject admission of defeat and runs from the shrine enclosure and drops as if dead. About an hour after he wakes from his trance an entirely changed man. He is now in his proper senses, the wild and fagged look in his face during the days of his possession has disappeared, the dazed expression with the snake-like fixedness of the eyeballs are gone. He regains his usual spirits and after the performance of his vow is sent back to his home.

At Muharram time the vows paid to the tomb or Tiāziāh of Husain or of Hasan are of two kinds. First, the distribution of milk and sherbat or dates or refined sugar to the people before a certain Tiāziāh; or second, the performance of some act of penance or self-torture before it.

In the first case the person vowing sends the thing vowed to the place where the Tiāziāh is made when the person making the tiāziāh says the fātiha or first chapter of the Kurán over it and breaks a coconut and distributes the juice with the sherbat or milk in small cups to those present. In the second case the person, who is generally a woman, vows to watch the Tiāziāh standing for a night or more. The woman goes to the place where the Tiāziāh is built and takes her stand in a corner keeping her vigil the whole night going where the Tiāziāh is carried and standing where it stops till it is brought back to its place. This class of vow is generally offered by women of the lower or middle orders and is performed on the night of the martyrdom or shahādāt that is the ninth night of the month of Muharram. Some people vow that if they gain a certain object or desire they shall on the tenth of every Muharram roll on the ground

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND

SHIÁS.

Vows.

Shrine Vows.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'ĀHS.Religious Buildings.

The I'dgah also called Namāzghāh or prayer-place, used only by Sunnis, is generally built outside of a town. It consists of a pavement of stone or cement raised three or four feet above the level of the ground. Along the west facing east is a wall with a small turret at each end. At the middle three to five steps rise from the pavement and form the pulpit, from which, on the Ramāzān-id and Bakr-id festivals, after the prayers are over sermons are preached.

Imāmbādās or the Leaders' enclosures are used only by Shi'āhs. There are but two in all Gujarāt, one at Surat and another, a grand one, in Cambay. Here, during the early days of the Muharram, the model of the Karbala shrine is kept and some chapters of some book commemorating the heroic sufferings and noble courage of the martyrs of Karbala is read, the congregation beating their breasts in response to the saying of the preacher and some of them bruising themselves till blood flows.

Religious Officers.

The Priest.

Besides the beadle mujāwār, and the mosque guardian mutawalli, five officers, the priest mulla, the preacher khatib, among the Shi'āhs the singer of elegies mariaḥkhan, the law professor and doctor of divinity maulavi, and the civil judge kazi, are entrusted with religious duties. Of these the priest or mulla is the lowest. Any man who can read the Kura'ān and knows his prayers may become a mulla. He is generally a poor man's son. But there is no rule as to his father's occupation or position. A man in search of a mulla's place applies to the warden of the mosque. Most of the mullas are young, and as the pay and gifts are not enough to keep a family in anything like comfort, they are most of them unmarried. A mulla bent on matrimony, as a rule, gives up his post and takes to weaving or some better-paid calling. The mulla's duties as a servant of the mosque are, calling to prayers five times a day,¹ acting as imām or leader of the prayer, and, where there is no beadle, keeping the mosque clean.² Besides these duties the mulla acts as a schoolmaster and a dealer in charms. His school or maktāb is a shed in the mosque enclosure, where in the morning from seven to nine and again from twelve to four, ten to fifteen boys and two or three girls of poor parents come to learn the Kura'ān. The mulla often does not understand the Kura'ān, but he can read it and teach his pupils to spell through it. As a dealer in charms he writes verses of the Kura'ān, to be bound round the arm, or hung on the neck, to ward off or cure diseases, or to ward off evil spirits or the influence of the evil eye and dreams. He interprets dreams and cures fever, bad eyes, and rheumatism. For fever he gives a black string with ten or fifteen knots to be worn round the neck; or he reads some verses from the Kuraán, breathes them on a jar of water and gives the water to the patients to drink; for bad eyes he gives an amulet táwiz, or a wick palila correctly fatíldh to be burnt. The Gujarát mulla takes no part in any birth marriage or death ceremony. In reward for his mosque duties the congregation arrange in turns, morning and evening, to send the mulla cooked food. Besides his food, during the Ramazán he generally gets about 8 annas in money from each house. For teaching he gets every Friday about $\frac{1}{2}$ anna from each pupil. On the feast or id days, he writes for each of the boys, in ornamental style, on a gilt and painted and illuminated sheet of paper a verse from the Kuraán, or some Hindustáni or Persian poetry, the boys paying him 2 annas to one rupee according to their parents' means. From a boy who passes the scripture test,¹ he gets a suit of clothes or Re. 1 to Rs. 50 in money. He makes little from his charms, from about a quarter to half an anna.

¹ He calls from the highest place in the mosque, before sunrise, God is great God is great (this four times over); I bear witness there is no God but one God (this twice); I bear witness that Muhammad is his prophet (this twice); come to pray (twice); come to salvation (twice); prayers are better than sleep (twice); God is great (twice); there is no God but one (once). Except that the words 'prayers are better than sleep' are left out, the call to each of the other four prayers is the same. This is the Sunni form; Shi'āhs after the words 'come to salvation,' add 'come to an act' (twice); they never use the phrase 'prayers are better than sleep.'

² In some mosques there is no mulla. In such cases a mujāwār or any one of the congregation would call to prayers, and the man of best position in the congregation would act as leader.

The singer of elegies marásiákhán, is found only among Shiáhs. Together with some knowledge of Persian and Hindustáni, he must have a good voice and a musical ear. He is generally self-taught. At the Muharram time, from the first to the fortieth day he sings elegies in honour of Hasan, Husain, and the other martyrs of Karbala. Sometimes a famous elegy singer marásiákhán is invited from Lakhnau or Bombay. The Shiáhs of Lakhnau have raised the composition and singing or recital of elegies to an art. Some of the Lakhnau elegy composers and reciters now take rank as poets of elegance and distinction in Hindustáni literature. Large sums of money are contributed sometimes by the Shiáhs of the chief towns of Gujarat and sometimes by one rich Shiáh alone to be paid to an elegy singer of note who is called to pass the Muharram. He composes his elegies for the occasion and sings them or recites them at the Imámábáds. His language voice and delivery are all so trained as to throw his congregation into transports of grief for the wrongs of the illustrious sufferers of Karbala and with rage and hatred towards the authors of their woe and their descendants.

Except in cities and towns where the kázi or judge does the duty on Fridays and feast-days the sermon khutbah is read by the khutab or preacher. The office of preacher requires no special training, and especially in north Gujarát is generally hereditary. The holder of the office neither teaches nor deals in charms and generally follows some calling or profession.

The law-doctor maulavi is in many respects the most important and prosperous of Musalmán religious officers.² These men are as a body intelligent and well read, some of them with a good knowledge of

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.

Religious Officers.

The Priest.

The Elegy Singer.

The Preacher.

The Law Doctor.

¹ See page 162.

² Except a few who have a name for learning, the maulavis are the representatives of the great preachers and holy men who came to Gujarat during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. In honour of most of these saints, their representatives hold a yearly meeting or ura. To this meeting the disciples murids come bringing gifts

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.The Law Doctor.

Arabic. In addition to their regular duties as law-doctors teachers and professors, some maulavis act as spiritual guides and also cure diseases with charms and amulets. As a doctor of Muhaminadan law, the maulavi occasionally gives legal opinions.¹ As a religious teacher the maulavi, on certain occasions, in private dwellings, preaches a sermon wadz on the text of a verse from the Kura'n.² As a professor, he teaches youths of fourteen to twenty Arabic law, logic, ethics, or theology. Sometimes a maulavi possesses in addition to his other religious accomplishments that of knowing the whole of the Kura'n by heart. This is a qualification much in request during the Ramazán when the leader or Imám of the long night prayers or turáwih is expected to recite one of the thirty chapters of the Kura'n each night so as to complete the whole by the last night of that sacred month. Any one who knows the Kura'n by heart has the title of Háfiz placed before his name. For this service he is paid at the end of the month Rs. 5 to Rs. 50 by the people who follow him in the prayers or by some one rich member of the congregation. The Háfiz is not always a maulavi. Many a man with no learning is a good Háfiz so long as he remembers the words. As a rule the people treat a Háfiz with much consideration, believing that a man who is a Háfiz frees twenty generations of his ancestors and descendants from the fire of Jehannam or hell. Many of the maulavis who are spiritual guides are the descendants of some of the early missionaries. A maulavi who follows the profession of spiritual guide, spends several months of the year doing little beyond preaching an occasional sermon or reading prayers. He generally starts about the beginning of Muharram, and for eight or nine months travels through the districts and villages where his followers live.³ On reach-to the shrine. As a rule the rich among them are entertained by the hosts. In the evening the shrine, covered with the richest cloths, is brightly lighted, music plays, and to the beating of one-hand-drums or dafs, the men forming a circle with a slow quaint movement called ratib, dance round the shrine beating their bodies with swords and ringed daggers, but through the power of the saint doing themselves no harm.

¹ Some maulavis are deeply read in temporal and spiritual law, and make their knowledge of the intricacies and contradictions of the Mahammanadan law a source of gain in inheritance cases. In such suits maulavis supply both sides with orders maazáds, each opposed to the other, till one of the parties, satisfying their avarice, binds them to his cause.

² Private services are held both at times of joy and sorrow. The times of joy are marriages and house-openings. The sad occasions are on the day of death, the third and the fortieth days after death, and the year after death. These services are of two kinds, the wadz or sermon and the maulúd or nativity hymn. The wadz consists of a sermon by the maulavi accompanied by an assistant called mufti who in Persian and Hindustani, before and after the sermon, chants the praises of the Prophet. The maulúd hymns, in honour of the Prophet's birth, are chanted in Arabic and sometimes in Hindustani by a band of fifteen to twenty choristers. These choristers also accompany the funerals of the rich chanting hymns in praise of the Prophet.

³ Some pirzaddhs have followers only in a few villages, some in all parts of Gujarát, and some not only in Gujarát but in places far distant as the Mauritius and Natal, in Burma, and in Singápur. When a pirzaddh dies his sons distribute among themselves their father's people, assigning to each son a certain number of households. It sometimes happens that for a sum of money or other consideration, one pirzaddh makes over to another the spiritual charge and the income derived from a certain number of families. Most of a pirzaddh's people are the children of followers and have to go through no special initiatory rites. But some among them, especially women and all new adherents, are formally received as the disciples of their spiritual guide. This ing a village, the maulavi takes up his quarters in the mosque or with the richest of his disciples. Here he preaches teaches and visits from house to house, prescribing for those who are sick. His followers, especially the Branch Sunni Bohorás who have much respect for their spiritual guides, not only look upon him as their teacher and adviser in this world, but trust that his merit and that of his forefathers will ensure their welfare in the next. According to the number of his people in any village and the distance he has to go to visit his other followers, the maulavi's stay in one place lasts from a few days to several weeks. While he is with them the people make him gifts. As a rule, except when one of them is sick or is anxious that he should be present at a marriage or other family event, the maulavi does not come back till a year is over. As a curer of diseases the maulavi like the mulla, writes texts for charms and amulets against sickness. For a sick patient he gives a knotted string necklace or writes a charm in sacred characters on paper or a chapter of the Kuraán with saffron-water on a china plate. The ink or saffron is washed off and the water drunk. The maulavi does not claim the power of driving out spirits, and, as a rule, would refuse to treat a person possessed except as he would treat other sick people. In most cases the connection between the Maulavi's family and their people has lasted for several generations. But it sometimes happens that a stranger, an Arab, an Afghán, or a North Indian wandering through the country, by some grace of manner, great learning, eloquence, asceticism, or some lucky cure, draws together a body of followers. Though few of them are rich, maulavis as a rule are by no means badly off. As a doctor of laws, he receives according to the nature of the case from Rs. 10 to Rs. 100; as a preacher he gets a gift of Rs. 2 for preaching in a private house. For his services as a master or professor he takes no fees. Those who are spiritual guides pirzádahs, are paid from each house of their followers Rs. 2 to Rs. 10 a year. This is given partly when the guide visits his people and partly at the yearly festival in honour of the guides' forefathers. When a marriage takes place in his family, the guide asks all his followers, and they are expected to attend, bringing presents of Rs. 10 to Rs. 50.

Under Muhammadan rule the Kázi was the civil and criminal judge. Now except that he leads the public prayers on the days of the Ramazán and Bakr feasts, he is little more than a registrar of marriages and divorces.¹ In spite of the loss of his most important functions, the Kázi holds a high place in the Musalmán community.²

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁS.Religious Officers.The Law Doctor.

The Registrar.

ceremony consists chiefly of repeating a prayer and receiving a tablo shajrah of the guide's saintly forefathers, imparting certain mysteries and making the proselyte drink of a cup touched by the guide's lips. Spiritual guides are looked up to as fathers.

¹ Except when an extra fee is paid, the kázi does not himself attend marriages. He is represented by a deputy ndib, who is paid by the kázi Rs. 5 to Rs. 10 a month. Separate marriage and divorce registers are kept.

² The office of kázi is elective in Kurat and Branch and hereditary at Ahmedábád. In most cases the pay of the kázi is partly drawn from an endowment. He also receives for each marriage, from the rich a shawl worth about Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 and Rs. 5 in cash, and from the middle class and poor about Rs. 24, and on the 1st days when he appears in the Mughal turban, chattridar that is umbrella-like in south Gujaráť and

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.

Holy Days.

Excepting the efforts of Wahhábí and orthodox maulavis to add to the number of their people, there is at present (A.D. 1897) in Gujarát little attempt to spread Islám. Now and again a Hindu of the lower class from worldly or other motives changes his religion, and is for a time the subject of talk. But cases of conversion from the preaching or teaching of religious men are almost unknown.¹

Except the Muharram, the Ramazan, and the Bakr festivals, Sunnis and Shiáhs keep different holy days. In the beginning of the year comes the month of Muharram, sacred to the memory of the Imáms Hasan and Husain. All the world over man craves excitement, the stirring of the nerves in grief, if not in joy. The popularity of the frantic lament for Adonis; of the pitiful tale of the hero Rustam slaying his unknown son Sohráb; of the long-drawn sorrow of the Christian Passion, show the longing for the unclaying luxury of grief.² So deep-seated a craving for grief could not rest satisfied with the hard demand of Islám for silent submission to the will of the Almighty enjoining even women to cease to mourn their dead. Among the first martyrs of the Faith the Persian passion for grief found³ at an early date one martyrdom the picturesque pathos of whose surroundings set tingling every cord of human pity. The children and women of the noblest house on earth deceived, deserted and tortured with thirst; the child's arms stretched forth for the blessing of the Imam lopped at the wrist; the babe shot in its father's arms; the noblest and bravest leader of Islám trusting to no weapon but to the justness of his cause betrayed and surrounded; his choice of death to dishonour; his lonely last onset; his wounds, his death, his mutilation, all these miseries caused not by an enemy of the Faith but by a kinsman a former friend and fellow-champion. Oh the pity of it! The pity of it!

The Sunni objects to the choice of Hasan and Husain as the martyrs most worthy to be mourned. What he asks, of Umar, the companion of the Prophet who lingered three days in his death agonies inflicted by the knife of the Magian assassin Abú-Lálu, called by the Persians Bárá-Firúz. What of Uthmán, the third Khalifah who died his head bowed in prayer after the agonies of a three days thirst? What still more of Ali the father of Husain? How was Husain greater, how his end more grievous than the end of the Lion of God?

gumbuz that is dome-like in the north, and the long robe jamah, he gets by subscription a pair of embroidered shawls worth about Rs. 50 and about Rs. 100 in cash.

¹ When a Hindu agrees to embrace Islám a party of Musalmáns are called together and in their presence he repeats the creed. Then sugared-water is drunk and the convert is set on a horse and led in state through the town. On his return he is circumcised, and a Musalmán name, generally either Abdallah creature or slave of Alláh, or Disa Muhammad He who has entered the Faith of Muhammad is given him. The expenses are borne by the person under whose patronage the convert enters Islám.

² Compare the Hindustani: Kyd gham hai mazé ká ki tabidí nahín bharti! How sweet is grief that never cloy.

³ As early as the Borjide Sultáns (A.D. 945-1097) the people of Baghdád dressed in black sackcloth and threw dust about their heads in the streets. Ockley's History of the Saracens, II. 189. In H. 352 (A.D. 963) mourning for the death of Husain was openly observed by Muiz-zud-daulah Deilami in Baghdád and in H. 359 (A.D. 963) flags were carried and elegies with loud lamentations publicly sung in memory of Husain's martyrdom. Elliot, VIII. 33.

True, the Shi'ah replies, the deaths of the first martyrs of the Faith may have caused sorer loss to Islām. Still the surroundings of none combined such varied and complete pathos as the last day of Husain. Once more the harder-grained Arab urges: Even for Ali the Lion of God, such unbridled mourning is wrong. Husain died in accordance with the Will of Allah. That Will can do no wrong. To cry out against it is to blaspheme. The softer Persian falls back, perhaps unconsciously, on his ancient dogma of Dualism. There are two powers, Evil and Good. Sometimes against the Will of the Almighty the Evil prevails. Such a time was the victory of the Ahriman Shamr. Did not the whole of nature mourn the destruction of the noble Husain. On the bitter black tenth of Muharram the beams of the sun were dim and blood-red, so that at noonday the stars shone quivering in the blood-red sky. Under each stone the earth sweated blood. When the head of the martyr passed within the palace of Kūfah, its walls wept tears of blood. This the Sunni rejects as unreal and overstrained. The Shi'ah in reply upbraids the Sunni. You turn a season of mourning into a time of foolish shows and noisy revelry. This unseemliness the stricter Arab-swayed Sunni admits. The thoughtful mourn, they say; only the thoughtless join in revelry. This riot and noise is the local or Indian element in the Muharram. As the special features of the Persian Muharram find their origin in the laments and the beliefs of the earlier faiths so the Indian additions have their roots in the deep rich soil of Hindu spirit-belief. The death and mourning season for Hasan and Husain, like all times of death and mourning draw on the mourners hosts of spirits. These spirits are not all bad and not all unfriendly to man. Only all are unhoused, now cold now hot, always naked, driven shelterless through space. Some we can please and coax into guardians, housing them in that pet home of spirits, a handsome tomb. Others we can lodge in that house of spirits the horseshoe, or tempt into the great spirit-haunt the tiger, letting them play in the bodies of our men and boys. For the rest we cannot provide. These with shoutings, drums, and buffetings we drive forth from our midst. The Indian element of nervous excitement might have died sobered into grayness by the Puritanism of Islām. Fortunately the revelry is kept alive by the Hindu belief in the spirit-scaring power of the rites of Muharram.

Among the Sunnis of north Gujarāt, the Muharram is a season of sorrow, the women of the poorer classes for ten days singing mourning songs and beating their breasts. But in the south after the fourth day the mourning changes to merriment and masquerade.¹ Some go about in bands richly and curiously dressed, singing with or without the accompaniment of a drum or dhol and guitar the story of Hasan and Husain's sufferings and death. Others in fulfilment of a vow dress their children in green like religious beggars, or, but this is done only by the lower classes, they paint themselves as tigers or in some other grotesque guise, and beg from house to house. Others again make themselves Dūlās that is bridegrooms. A Shi'ah belief is current that

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.

Holy Days.

Muharram.

¹ The only observance kept up after the fourth day is placing at the roadside plain or sugar-d-water for the use of children and travellers. This is done till the tenth day.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'IS.

Holy Days.

Muharram.

when the band of Holy Karbala martyrs was besieged and hemmed in within their intrenched camp by the merciless Umaidullah-ibni-Zaid, a marriage between Kásim, the youthful nephew of Husain and Husain's little daughter the lady Sakinah, was stopped by the slaughter of the bridegroom. Some Dakhan Musalmáns came into possession of the cast shoe of the bridegroom's horse. They brought it to India and during the Muharram when the relics of the Karbala are exposed to view Lord Horseshoe or Nal Sáheb, in which dwells something of the bridegroom's spirit, works miraculous cures. It follows that the holder of Lord Horseshoe may receive into him the spirit or hál of the bridegroom. To gain this inspiration the following rules are observed. A silver or iron rod two to three feet long ending in a massive crescent or horseshoe and covered on all sides with peacock-tail feathers is for a considerable time set before some burning incense. In the Dakhan especially in Haidarábád after each Muharram many such rods with horse-shoe tops are thrown into a well. Before the next Muharram all who have thrown their rods into it repair to the well and await the pleasure of the martyr who makes the rod of the person he has chosen to become a bridegroom rise to the surface. In Gujavát this miracle is not vouchsafed. In Gujavát a hole is dug about a foot broad and a foot deep. In this hole a fire is kindled and the person who has vowed to become a Dála goes round the fire seven or eleven times. If the man or any of his friends notices the bridegroom-spirit moving the devotee they wave the rod with the feathers up and down before his face fanning him gently while incense is freely burnt. The people round keep up a chorus of Dála Dála Dála Dála to the measure of which the person wishing to be possessed sways at first in gentle and by degrees in more violent oscillations. When the full power of the breath or hál fills the devotee, that is when his eyeballs turn up and become fixed in a stony stare and his body grows cold he is made to keep his face bowed among the peacock feathers. After his face has been for some time pressed in the feathers the spirit seizes him and he rushes out heedless of water or of fire. As he starts one of his friends holds him from behind supporting and steadying him. He guides the Dála's aimless impulse to the place or akhúdá of other Dálas and Taázias where fresh incense is burnt before his face. On his way from place to place the Dála is stopped by wives praying for the blessing of children or the removal of a rival or the casting out of a ginn or other evil spirit. To secure a son the Dála generally directs a flower or two to be picked from the jasmine garlands that deck his shoe-rod. On returning to his own place or akhúdá the Dála falls senseless and after remaining senseless for an hour or two regains consciousness. Only those can become possessed who have vowed to be Dálas. Even to these the affliction is sometimes denied. No woman can be possessed by the Dála spirit.

Many prepare *Taázias*¹ or tábúts, bamboo and tinsel models of the shrine of the Imám at Karbala, some of them large and handsome costing not less than a hundred rupees. These shrines are kept in their houses for several days, and on the night of the ninth are taken round the chief streets. As the lābbīs pass poor Hindu and Musalman men and women in fulfilment of vows not unfrequently throw themselves in the roadway and roll in front of the shrine. On the tenth day, with much show and noise, the owners of the shrines forming a procession take them to a river or a lake and cast them into the water.¹ On the evening of the same day they prepare sweet-bread and sugared-water and distribute it among their friends.² Unlike the Sunnis, the Shiāhs keep the Muharram for forty days. Of these the first ten are a time of special mourning. During these days in south Gujarat, a band of Shiāhs dressed in black and with bare feet beating drums and cymbals, take Hasan and Husain's standards from the Imāmbāda and carry them in procession to the house of some one who has made a vow. Here, after beating their breasts and singing dirges, they are served with sugared-water sherbat, and the standards are decked with garlands of flowers. Again, in the morning or evening, parties of twenty to fifty meet in some Imāmbāda or private house to hear the story of the massacre of Karbala. The room is laid with carpets and over a chair set in a corner a white cloth is spread. When the guests are served with sugared-water sherbat, or in the north opium-water kasūmba, and the pipe have passed round, one of their number standing near the chair begins to read. He tells of the virtues of their leaders Hasan and Husain and of Husain's bravery, dashing almost alone against the armies of the Kūfis. As he comes to their leader's last moments and death, his mournful movements and tones raise among his hearers the keenest sympathy and grief and the sonorous tones of the speaker's voice are drowned by the sobs and groans of his audience. Then moving forward among them, telling of the sufferings of the martyr's wife and little children, his hearers gather round him weeping aloud and beating their breasts with so fierce a sorrow that they sometimes fall senseless to the ground. The service lasts for about an hour, and after some spiced-water and mourning-sweets halwa, the guests take their leave. Among Sunnis the āshūra or tenth day of the Muharram is held sacred in honour of the creation of Adam and Eve. Many observe a fast on this day after the example of the Prophet.

¹ In Surat, where the practice of Muharram shows is carried further than in other parts of Gujarat, on the evening of the fifth, after eating consecrated sugar-cakes called chúngás, children are dressed in green and present of cakes, and, in the case of families connected by betrothal, green clothes are sent. Besides dressing as tigers men

On the tenth of Safar the second month, Shiāhs repeat dirges and offer prayers for the souls of Hasan and Husain.

On the thirteenth of the same month come the Tera or Talan Tezi. Sunnis keep this day in honour of the Prophet's recovery from a severe sickness. In the morning in north Gujarat prayers are offered for the Prophet and parched gram and molasses are eaten.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND

SHIĀHS.

Holy Days.

Muharram.

Tenth Safar.

Thirteenth
Safar.

and boys often join in bands called garals, and go about singing the Muharram dirges, dressed like Hindu Gostis or Hinaini-Brahman beggars.

¹ The making of lābbīs is said to date from the time of Amir Timur (A.D. 1400) who on his return from a pilgrimage to Karbala built a miniature copy of Husain's tomb, which he thought added to the mourning ceremonies of the first ten days of Muharram.

² In Ahmedabad some of the best Tad:ids are kept in the mosque.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIĀHS.

Holy Days.

Twelfth Rabi-ul-awwal.

On the last Wednesday of the same month, a day known as the A'khari-chār-shambah, Sunni¹ townspeople fry sweetmeats and eat them in the fields and gardens outside of the city in memory of a recovery of the Prophet from a dangerous illness.

The twelfth of Rabi-ul-awwal the third month, the Wafāt or day of the Prophet's death, is among Sunnis the greatest day in the year next to the ids. In the evening rice and milk kheer, a dish of which the Prophet was fond, is cooked and prayers are offered for the Prophet's soul.² In the evening private services are held at the mosques with sermons and chants. After the service is over the stone-footprint, hair, or other relic of the Prophet which may be treasured in the mosque is shown.

Seventeenth Rabi-ul-awwal.

On the seventeenth of the third month Gujarāt Musalmāns mark the Maulūd or birthday of the Prophet by feasting and giving presents.

Eleventh Rabi-us-sani.

On the eleventh of Rabi-us-sani the fourth month, Sunnis celebrate the birth of Sayad Abdnl-Kādir Jilāni, commonly known as the Pirān-Pir or Saint of Saints of Baghdād. On this day the poor light eleven or twenty-two lamps, and, in the houses of the rich and well-to-do, small leafless trees or green-bordered frames called mehdi, are hung with eleven lamps and covered with presents of fruit and sweets for children. At night powdered sugared-bread or malidah is eaten.

Eleventh Rajab.

On the eleven first nights of Rajab, the sixth or nativity month, in honour of the Prophet's birth, among Sunnis sermons or wad'as are preached and maulūds chanted. Great numbers attend, and on the eleventh many charitable people in Ahmedābād and some in Surat and Broach, give a morsel of sacred food called tabarruk to every one present. At Ahmedābād the heads of the Rafāis, followers of Sayad Ahmed Kabīr a nephew of the Pirān-Pir, march about carrying green banners, playing kottledrums, and brandishing and beating their bodies with a chained mace gurz, with a pointed handle. They are generally asked by more than one person to share the sacred food or tabarruk which is served to them in small dishes.

Fourteenth Shābān.

On the fourteenth evening of Shābān the eighth month, comes the night of record Shab-i-barāt. On this night the fates of unborn souls are registered in heaven. Among Sunnis requiems are sung, sweets and sweet-bread are eaten and sent as presents to friends, and fireworks are let off or sent to relatives, especially to those to whom a son or daughter of the house is betrothed.

Nineteenth and Twenty-first Ramazān.

The nineteenth and twenty-first days of the ninth month Ramazān termed Katli Imām Ali and Hazrat Ali, are kept holy by Shiāhs,

¹ The festival is common both to Shiāhs and Sunnis. Shiāhs say that as Safar is the unluckiest of months, its last day is passed in feasting out of the city, that evil may remain outside and not find its way into their homes.

² These customs are observed from the first to the twelfth of Rabi-ul-awwal, the twelfth day being held most sacred. The Shiāhs fix this festival on the 28th of the same month.

the nineteenth as the day on which Ali was wounded and the twenty-first as the day on which he died. On both days they give beggars food and pray for Ali's soul and mourn.

At the end of the Ramazan fast, that is on the first day of Shawwal the tenth month, comes the fast-breaking festival Id-ul-Fitr commonly known as the Ramazan Id.¹ This feast is one of the two greatest Musalmán festivals. Sunnis and Shiáhs of all ages and of both sexes bathe put on new clothes and perfume themselves. They give alms in money or grain mostly wheat, this form of charity being called 'sitrah,' for without alms their fast is vain, and take a light meal of vermicelli milk clarified-butter sugar and dates. Between eight and twelve the men form a procession and escort the kázi or other Musalmán of high position to the Idgáh that is the place for the special Id prayers most of them repeating mentally the glorification of the name of Alláh in the following words: 'Alláh-o-Akbar! Alláh-o-Akbar! Lá-Iláha illalláho Alláh-o-Akbar! Alláh-o-Akbar wa lilláhil hamd' Great is Alláh, great is Alláh: There be none as great as Alláh: Great is Alláh, unto Him be all praise. The prayers at the Idgáh together with an Arabic sermon, in an old stereotyped form in praise of the Id, read by the Kázi standing on the pulpit, wooden staff in hand in imitation of the Prophet (on whom be peace) last for about an hour and a half, and when the prayers and sermon are over, the people go home and spend the rest of the day in feasting, making presents and paying and receiving visits.

On the tenth day of Zilhajj the twelfth month, the day after the chief pilgrimage day at Makkah, comes the second great feast, the festival of sacrifice Id-uz-zeha, also called the Bakr or Cow-Id in commemoration of the offering of Ismael by Abraham.² Early in the morning religious beggars and others crowd round the dwellings of Musalmáns begging for alms. On this Id as on the Ramazan Id all, except those who are mourning the loss of a near relative, wash put on their best clothes and perfume themselves according to the behest and the practice of the Prophet. The whole body of Sunni Musalmáns go riding or driving in procession to the Idgáh and after prayers return home, and, if they can afford it, sacrifice goats and send presents of the flesh to relations and friends. The rest of the day is spent in visiting. Alms³ are generally given about the time of the Bakr festival, either in cash in grain or in cloth.

On the eighteenth of Zilhajj the twelfth month a great Shiáh holiday called the lake holiday Id-i-ghadir is held. On this day the Prophet seated by a lake proclaimed in a joyous moment that Ali was his own flesh and body.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND

SHIÁHS.

Holy Days.

First Shawwa

Tenth Zilhajj.

Eighteenth Zilhajj.

¹ Shiáhs differ from Sunnis in keeping the Ramazan Id a day sooner and in not going to the Idgáh.

² Musalmáns hold that Ismael, not Isaac, was the son offered by Abraham.

³ Alms (sadd or purification) should be given of five things, money, cattle, grain, fruit, and merchandise. The amount varies, though in general it is said to be one-twentieth of a year's income. Alms should be given to pilgrims, beggars, debtors, religious champions, travellers, and pro-cities.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.Early
Beliefs.

Possession.

On the twenty-eighth of Zilhajj comes the festival of Bāba Shujā'ād-dīn Abū Lūlū a fire-worshipping convert to Islam, who, on this day murdered the Khakīfah Umar. On this account Shi'āhs hold the day sacred and rejoice for three days.

Besides their faith in the leading doctrines of their religion, a belief in spirits, in magic, and in the power of the evil eye has a strong hold on the Musalmāns of Gujarāt.¹ Evil spirits out of hatred to mankind, and spirits either good or bad forced to do so by some magician, cause men grievous harm, making them mad or sick, destroying their houses, or taking away their goods. When any one is suddenly struck dumb or appears mad, shaking his head or moving about restlessly or lying prostrate, his friends fear that he may be possessed by a devil. A religious man, a Sayad or Mulla known to have power over spirits, is called in. He finds out the name of the patient, when and under what circumstances he was seized, inquires into the symptoms, decides whether it is a case of possession or of simple sickness, and, if it is a case of possession, by what incantation or spell the spirit can best be cast out.

Magic.

The Kuraān though forbidding its practice enjoins a belief in the existence of magic. Though forbidden magic is often resorted to especially by women. The chief aims are to win another's affections, to cause strife between rivals, and to get rid of a foe. To gain the first two ends love or hate potions are given, and to gain the third an image of the victim is made in dough and pricked to pieces with needles. Almost all men, and Dheds and Kolis in an especial degree, have the power of the evil eye. So strong is this belief that a Muhammadan will seldom eat a meal in the sight of a stranger, and before taking his infant into the street will blot his face with collyrium or lampblack. According to the Kuraān the first teachers of magic were Hārūt and Mārūt, two angels of high estate, who, proud of their purity, railed at the passions and weaknesses of the sons of men. This boasting offended the Divine Ruler. He commanded them to show their excellence by sojourning for a time under equal conditions with man born of woman and to prove their worth by coming out scathless from the allurements of Love and Passion. Hārūt and Mārūt were dropped from heaven into Babylon where their great knowledge soon gained them the position of judges. They long administered the law righteously. At last came their day of trial. While seated on the tribunal of justice a woman entered the judgment-hall dowered with charms so rare that her first glances fascinated and enslaved her angel-judges. Her suit was not just. But trusting in her charms she addressed herself to the judges and they listened to her words and inclined towards her with amorous desire. She won her cause to the immediate and eternal damnation of the judges, who hang head-down fettered with chains in the great well of Babylon till "the Day of Striking, when men like moths shall be scattered abroad and the mountains shall become like carded wool." Even now any one approaching the well can hear the 'Ai' 'Ai' of the fallen and suffering angels. Further by hearing their voices even though he sees them not the hearer can learn magic. The study of magic though somewhat blighted by Western materialism is still pursued by Indian Musalmāns. It is not rare to find men like Muhammad Ali Jinnī and Muhammad Chhail of Kāthiāwār claiming occult powers and occasionally heightening the dusky faith of admirers by successful displays of magic.

¹ Gujarāt Musalmāns believe both in Muhammadan, that is Arab and Persian, and in Hindu spirits. Of Hindu powers the ghost bhūt and the witch dākan, are the most common. Musalmān spirits belong to two classes, the genii ginn or good spirits and the devils shaitāns or bad spirits. The devils are descended from the nine sons of Satan who by birth was one of the goati. The genii, who are nine-tenths spirit and one-tenth flesh are divided into twelve troops or armies, three of which are Musalmān. Besides the genins and the demon there are the fairy jari, whose shadow makes people crazy, and the biydhāni or ghoul. To gain power over spirits a man must learn from some evorcist. He must pay the greatest regard to cleanness, he must pass long times in fasts and meditation, he must be very careful as to what he eats, learn incantations and calculations of mystic numbers and the influences of the planets, and spend most of his time in repeating incantations. Those who go through this training are chiefly Sayads and Mullas. When the exorcist is satisfied that the case is one of possession, he casts out the spirits by drawing magic squares and circles, by repeating incantations and verses from the Kuraān, or by giving the patient a charm to eat or an amulet to wear.

Magic is of two kinds Rūhāni and Shaitāni that is divine and satanic. The practice of satanic magic is strictly forbidden. Divine magic is of two kinds Ustari high and Safli low. The practice of ustari or high magic is the commoner. High magic is a sublime science studied only by good men for good ends. Perfection in High Magic consists in the knowledge of the Isim-i-Azad or Great Name, a knowledge first possessed by the Prophet Suleimān and since Suleimān transmitted to those only who are highly favoured by Providence. It was in virtue of engraving the great name on his ring that Suleimān possessed dominion over men and genii and over the winds and birds and beasts. By pronouncing the Great Name his minister a jinn of the name of Asaf in a tree transported the throne of Bilqis the queen of Sheba from Yemen to the court of Suleimān at Jerusalem. The uttering of Suleimān's name casts out demons, cures the sick, and raises the dead. Other names possess special virtue. By the names Hitam-karashat and Hitam-fazashat, two madness-causing and madness-curing genii, the fiends of madness are excited or subdued. The names of certain prophets and holy men have also a special charm. Further certain verses of the Kur'ān and invocations and words unmeaning or unintelligible to the uninitiated have a particular efficacy. The words Yā Hafid make certain spirits or genii subservient for good and the words Yā Jabbar make them subservient for evil. Other words command the winds and the waves or rule the souls of men and other animals reptiles and insects. Abū-Khuldūn (A.C. 1332-1405) (Prolegomena, Arabic Text, Vol. I, page 59) mentions on the authority of Mu'fadh a famous Arab writer on the occult sciences, that the words Tawāghut, ladūn, gizwid, vayladis, nūfua, ghūdus possess particular powers. Pronounced with concentration of the mind in a state of ceremonial purity before sleep they induce dreams wherein the person pronouncing them is directed to follow a particular course to gain the object for which he has pronounced the charmed words. He adds that a person appears in a dream who shows the way how to gain the end. Abū-Khuldūn himself speaks of having seen strange visions and obtained much successful direction in the affairs of his life from his knowledge and use of these words. A particular course of

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.

Early

Beliefs.

Magic.

¹ Lane's Arabic Society in the Middle Ages, 81.

Chapter VII.
Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.
Early
Beliefs.
Magic.

food and diet are necessary to obtain mastery over the spirits which are subject to these charmed words.

Pronounced by the ceremonially pure the concluding words of the eighty-sixth chapter of the Kuraán entitled the Star, "Verily they are laying a plot and I am laying a plot"¹ deprive a scorpion of the power of stinging. Again written charms of mysterious numerical combinations and diagrams have power for good. A magician who desires to practice good magic must not only possess full knowledge of the art. To secure efficacy he must in a given period repeat the charms a certain number of thousands of times during which he should abstain from animal and certain other food. The term of forty days called chilláh is a favourite period for acquiring the virtue and power which are supposed to reside in a name or an invocation. During the forty days the name or verse must be repeated a certain number of times each day at the same hour and in a fixed lonely place free from impurities. Failure in the appointed time requires the observance to be begun afresh. The performer of the chilláh must work with incense and perfumes burning and be clean in body and clothes. The spirits who are the slaves of the verse or name try their best to turn the magician from his purpose by appearing before him in the most terribly grotesque forms. Woe to the man who allows fear to interrupt the repetition of the name. He at once becomes mad and remains insane for the rest of his days or a palsy or tremor which no medicine can cure overtakes him. If the neophyte is strongminded enough not to be troubled by apparitions his spirit-opponents resort to other means. An A'mil or exorcist tells how when he was engaged in mastering a charm for curing the bite of venomous animals he saw his father led bound and pinioned to the place where he was sitting engaged in his chilláh by a man whom he knew to be his father's bitterest enemy. On coming before him the man made his father kneel, and, drawing his sword, prepared to cut off the old man's head while the father entreated the son by all the most sacred ties of filial love to save him. His father assured him it was no illusion but bare and bitter reality. That the enemy had rushed into the house and on the father's crying to the son for help had defied him and his son to save him and had dragged him to his son's presence to kill him. The magician had nearly forgotten himself and was about to leave his charmed circle when he remembered and paid no heed to the wily spirit, who thus foiled vanished. The next spiritual attempt to defeat the exorcist was still more terrible. The exorcist fancied that the house he was sitting in swung to and fro as if about to fall on him and to crush him. When this temptation failed he was allowed peacefully to finish his chilláh. This exorcist repents the invocation learned among such horrors, and, blowing on a piece of loaf-sugar, gives it to eat to those bitten by a mad dog or a cobra or stung by a scorpion. He is said to have effected numerous cures. He died at Surat in March 1898 after a long and green old age.

The Asmá or Names of God belong to two classes the Jaláli or terrible and the Jamáli or merciful. The Angry the Just the Avenger call forth terrible apparitions. At the sound of the Pitiſul the Gentle the Merciful appear pleasing viſions of fair and graceful angels. Though terrifying and hard to maſter, the fierce names are prompter in effect.

¹ The words of the Kuraán are: Innahum yakiduna la'idan wa akidu la'idu.

Satanic or black magic depends on the agency of genii and evil ſpirits. The ways of acquiring its knowledge are as unclean as the learning of white magic is pure. The profeſſors and practitioners of black magic cannot for an hour remain with a clean body without the danger of loſing their power. They muſt never bathe, never uſe perfumes, never pray, never love any action that is good or virtuous. The Indian or Gujarát means for ſubduing evil ſpirits is perhaps even weirder and more groſſeſome than the Arabian. At Diwáli time during the dark quarter of Kártik (September-October) when all evil ſpirits are free to revisit their earthly haunts, eſpecially on the night of the black fourteenth, the perſon anxious to ſubject evil ſpirits to his power, puts on the dirtieſt of apparel and anoints himſelf with evil-smelling oils and providing himſelf with a hamper of the worſt food and with beef mutton and buffalo fleſh and entrails, a ſharp knife and large quantities of gúgal incenſe (Balsamadendron amyrís agallocha) ſtarts for his favourite ſpirit-haunt which is either the common burning ground or the loweſt graveyard or the burial-place of executed murderers. On reaching the place and ſeating himſelf within a charmed circle he keeps his ſharp knife ready and begins repeating his invocations and ſpells and throwing about him grains of mung Phaseolus mungo. When he thinks his ghoully gueſts have preſented themſelves in obedience to his ſummons he aſks them to demand the food they prefer. If the ſpirits demand any particular fleſh he has brought he throws them choice pieces out of the charmed circle. If any of his gueſts who are more difficult to pleaſe than the reſt are not ſatisfied with the food offered and demand human fleſh, the ſorcerer muſt either throw the ſpirit a piece of fleſh cut from his own thigh or fall a victim to his raſhneſs. If the ſpirit accepts the ſorcerer's fleſh the ſpirit becomes the ſorcerer's ſlave for a year. Sometimes a ſorcerer unwilling to cut off his own fleſh perſuades a pupil or a friend to go with him. If the ſpirit requires human fleſh the ſorcerer offers his companion as a victim on condition the ſpirit ſpares his victim till he reaches his home. The ſpirit agrees and when the ſeance is over follows his victim and at the victim's houſe kills him by eating his liver. Next morning the victim is found dead having thrown up broken pieces of his eaten liver like clots of blood.

Omens are drawn from the cry of birds. The hooting of an owl is believed to threaten the lives of children. But its power for evil can be diſarmed by the gift of grain in charity. The cooing of a dove foretells ruin, and the cawing of a crow the arrival of ſome member of the family or of a friend. A death follows the lonely midnight howl of the dog, for the dog's eye, undimmed by the film of paſſion, can ſee hovering over the doomed houſe the awful form of Iſrael the angel of death. A cat croſſing the path is a bad omen. But it is lucky to ſee a child at play or a woman fetching water or carrying milk or whey. Creeping feelings in the ſkin of the face are a favourite ſource of omens. They are lucky if felt on the right corner of the right eyelid, unlucky if felt on the left corner of the left eyelid. A

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHIÁHS.

Early

Beliefs.

Magic.

Omens.

Chapter VII.

Religion.

SUNNIS AND SHI'AS.Early
Beliefs.

Omens.

sudden fit of hiccup is a sign of being affectionately remembered by absent friends¹ as the itching of the right palm foretells gain of money. The same feeling in the sole of the right foot prognosticates a journey. Each day of the week is believed to be fitted for certain acts and unsuited for others.² And certain days of the month, depending on direction in which the traveller is going, are good for starting on a journey.³

¹ The Urdu poet expresses this sentiment in the following couplet :

ہجر میں ہمتے عجب طور سے دلشاد کیا * ہجکی آئی تو کہا اسنے ہمیں یاد کیا

Hijr mein ham ne djab tadur se dil shad kiyā

Hichki āī to kaha unne hamen yād kiyā.

In absent hours the hiccup heartens me.

Each spasm says : Thy love remembers thee.

² Sunday is a good day for naming a child, eating a new dish, wearing new clothes, learning a new lesson, beginning service, and tilling land. It is a bad day to buy a horse or to set out on a journey. Monday is good for taking the first bath after recovery from illness, for sending a bride to her husband's house, for laying the foundation of a house, for entrusting anything to a person, for bartering an animal, and for travelling east. Tuesday is good for eating a new dish, taking a recovery bath, giving any business in charge, and burying an animal. It is an ill day for travelling north and for buying a cow. Wednesday is good for sending a bride to her husband's house, naming an infant, putting on new clothes, shaving, eating a new dish, learning a new lesson, tilling the ground, laying the foundation of a house, and changing a residence. It is bad for travelling north and for buying a cow. Thursday is good for the same works as Wednesday but is bad for travelling south and for buying an elephant. Friday is good for the same works as Wednesday and bad for buying goats. Saturday is good for the same works as Wednesday and bad for travelling east or for buying a camel.

³ Travellers consulting and following the guidance of the diagram start under the special protection of the Prophets Ali and Khizr.

CHAPTER VIII.

CUSTOMS.

Of the rites and ceremonies observed by Gujarát Sunni Musalmáns the chief are pregnancy, birth, naming, sacrifice, initiation, betrothal, marriage, and death.

Chapter VIII.
Customs.

The Urdu proverb Margae mardūd, na fátihā na darūd Here lies the wretch eternally damned without the Fátihā or the *Darūd*¹ shows the horror felt by the Gujarát Musalmán at the prospect of leaving no issue to perform these ceremonies on his behalf. His desire for the immortality given by children, especially by male children, is much akin to the Hindu hankering after issue to save him from the hell of oblivion by performing his shrāddha or mind-feast. After a year or two of married life if their union is not blessed by issue, some Gujarát Musalmán women resort to remedies to obtain children. Saints, living or dead, are appealed to, the former to bless by giving charms or medicines to the wife who yearns to be a mother. The law doctors or exorcists also give charms, often like the diagram, written on a piece of paper to wash in rosewater and drink.

1	2	3	4
2	5	6	7
3	4	5	6

Some A'mils or exorcists give their applicants cardamoms or cloves or pieces of candied sugar on which the mystic and powerful names of God having being blown are supposed to possess the virtue of casting out the spirit of barrenness, since as a rule barrenness is due to spirit-possession. Others direct strands of thread to be worn round the abdomen or the neck; others again simply write or trace some name or charm of words with the tip of the finger over the womb of the woman or the loins of the man. The exorcist or A'mil has also to help after conception with the object that the issue may be male. He gives charms to be washed and drunk every month or some written charm to be washed in water for a monthly bath. Some dead saints have a reputation as child-givers. To tie knots on bits of string or ribbon with one end attached to a post or pillar supporting a canopy over a saint's grave or to a trellis or balustrade around a shrine is considered by barren women one of the surest means of obtaining issue. Blochmann (A'in-i-Akbari, 267 note 1 para. 3) notices that the tomb of Sheikh Salim-i-Chishti at Fatehpur Sikhrī, in whose house the Emperor Jehangir (A.D. 1605-1627) was born, is up to the present day visited by childless Hindu and Musalmán women. A tree in the com-

PREGNANCY.
The Exorcist
A'mil.

¹ Fátihā is the opening chapter of the Kuraán in praise of God : Darūd the calling down of blessings on the Prophet.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

*The Exorcist
A'mil.*

pound of the saint Shāih Ālam of Ahmedābād yields a peculiar acorn-like fruit which is sought after far and wide by issue-seekers and carried away and given to their wives who eat the fruit and from the moment the fruit is eaten conceive. If the birth of a child follows the eating of the acorn the man or woman who took the acorn should for a certain number of years come at every anniversary of the saint and nourish the tree with a supply of milk. The leaves of the tree near the grave of the Mirān Sāheb of U'njhā are also said to favour conception. In addition to these jasmin and rose bushes at the shrines of certain saints are supposed to possess issue-giving properties. To draw virtue from the saint's jasmin the woman who yearns for a child bathes and purifies herself and goes to the shrine and seats herself under or near the jasmin bush with her skirt spread out. As many flowers as fall into her lap so many children will she have. In north Gujarāt if after the birth of a child no male issue follows, or being born does not live, the first-born child is believed to be the cause of the evil. The first-born is looked on as possessed by some malignant spirit who destroys the young lives of the new-born brothers and sisters. So at the mother's next confinement molasses and sesame seed are passed seven or nine times over the new-born infant from head to foot and the elder boy or girl is given these to eat. The molasses represent the life of the young one given to the spirit who possesses the first-born. Children born deformed or with one or two teeth are supposed to exercise a baneful influence over their parents and near relatives. A child born with teeth is believed to exercise so malignant an influence that the early death of one of the parents is almost certain.

If the treatment of the live or the relics of the dead saint result in pregnancy the greatest care is taken that no baneful influences interfere with a safe delivery. The lady is made to wear a number of charms and always to carry a knife or other piece of iron. She must not go out of doors especially on new-moons and Thursdays, and on all days at sunset must avoid groves and the sea and riversides. Charmed silk threads called bhārdori, literally the spirit-laden cord, are worn round her waist and abdomen, and, especially if any portion of the period of her pregnancy falls on or about the days of Divāli the Hindu New-year, which is considered an evil-spirit-time, she requires the greatest care. She is not allowed to go under the māndwa or alcove built before a house on marriage or other festive occasions. She must avoid marriage or death ceremonies, must not pass under the city gates, and must cross no river or sea. During eclipses of the sun and the moon particular care must be taken that neither she nor her husband, nor even the relatives of her husband, eat or drink or smoke or cut or clip or break anything. If any of them eat a pān or betel-leaf or even fold a pān the child is sure to be born with ears folded like a 'pān'-leaf: if the relation cuts or clips any thing the child is sure to have a deformed finger or a hare-lip. It is asserted that an obstinate husband of a pregnant woman, with a fool-hardy disregard for these customs folded a piece of cloth round his face during an eclipse, and his child was born with a face-covering or caul. If any member of the husband's family smokes during an eclipse the child born has a weak chest which gurgles like a 'bukkākā' when he breathes. During an eclipse the lady her husband and his near relatives have to sit still and do nothing but pray or read the Kuraán, the pregnant lady being sent to bed with a packet of wheat from 1 to 5½ seers or pounds in quantity, which after the eclipse is ended, is added to a larger quantity and boiled with sugar and cocoa-kernel and distributed among friends. The bhárdori or weight that is the spirit-laden cord, in the sense of the ill-luck imprisoning cord, is regarded as a preservation of the child from conception to delivery. It is a seven-braided piece of silk upon which the Mulla or exorcist spends time and trouble, repeating over it verses of the Kuraán or charms and tying a knot at each repetition making the number of knots correspond with the number of pregnancy months and giving the silk to be wound round the womb. The braids are particoloured white, red, green, black, and fine variations of these leading colours. This silk cord is a guard against miscarriage and all the evils, spiritual as well as physical, that cause miscarriage. At the end or beginning of the ninth month the braid is unwound and some incense is burned under it and together with some flowers it is thrown into an unused well or if no well is at hand into a river or a lake or other water. During the period of pregnancy the woman may not wear new clothes, jewels, even bangles the symbol of married life which the married woman holds most sacred. All the usual little adornments of the person otherwise considered insuperably necessary are during pregnancy laid aside and looked upon as forbidden. No eyelid is darkened with antimony, no finger or toe-tip, no palm or sole is reddened with henna, no tooth is blackened with missi, and certain kinds of food are forbidden. The pregnant lady is not to touch a cocoa-kernel, nor to taste any underground root except the exotic potato. The ban against ornaments lasts till the satmása or seventh-month celebration, but abstinence from forbidden food sometimes lasts until after the child is weaned, the notion being to keep both the mother and her nursing from unwholesome food and from milk derived from such food.

The great event of the pregnancy is the satmása or the nawmása the seventh or ninth-month celebration. It is held with different rites in different families, but usually it is the season for the fulfilment of all vows for the preservation of the foetus and the safety of the child and its delivery. The rite generally begins with the pot or potter ceremony with which all joyous rites at births, betrothals, and marriages begin. It is called Birat or Biradh-bharna literally pot-filling. A complete or perfect biradh consists of 125 pots, four large and the rest small. They are bespoken at the potter's who paints them himself. He is paid Rs. 5 for the pots, an invariable fee. Sometimes half the number of pots is sent for and sometimes a quarter in which case it is called half a birat or a quarter birat and the potter is paid proportionately less. In some places these pots are in the first instance taken to a well and a young married woman who has never lost a husband, and in the case of a pregnancy-celebration a woman who has never lost a child even by miscarriage, is sent to a well. She draws water and pours a little of it into each of the pots and then the woman and the potter with the pots are escorted with music to the house of joy and the women (if they observe

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

*The Exorcist
A'mil.*

Seventh and Ninth Month Rites.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

*The Exorcist
A'mil.*

pound of the saint Shāih Alam of Ahmedābād yields a peculiar acorn-like fruit which is sought after far and wide by issue-seekers and carried away and given to their wives who eat the fruit and from the moment the fruit is eaten conceive. If the birth of a child follows the eating of the acorn the man or woman who took the acorn should for a certain number of years come at every anniversary of the saint and nourish the tree with a supply of milk. The leaves of the tree near the grave of the Mirān Sāheb of U'njā are also said to favour conception. In addition to these jasmin and rose bushes at the shrines of certain saints are supposed to possess issue-giving properties. To draw virtue from the saint's jasmin the woman who yearns for a child bathes and purifies herself and goes to the shrine and seats herself under or near the jasmin bush with her skirt spread out. As many flowers as fall into her lap so many children will she have. In north Gujarāt if after the birth of a child no male issue follows, or being born does not live, the first-born child is believed to be the cause of the evil. The first-born is looked on as possessed by some malignant spirit who destroys the young lives of the new-born brothers and sisters. So at the mother's next confinement molasses and sesame seed are passed seven or nine times over the new-born infant from head to foot and the elder boy or girl is given these to eat. The molasses represent the life of the young one given to the spirit who possesses the first-born. Children born deformed or with one or two teeth are supposed to exercise a baneful influence over their parents and near relatives. A child born with teeth is believed to exercise so malignant an influence that the early death of one of the parents is almost certain.

If the treatment of the live or the relics of the dead saint result in pregnancy the greatest care is taken that no baneful influences interfere with a safe delivery. The lady is made to wear a number of charms and always to carry a knife or other piece of iron. She must not go out of doors especially on new-moons and Thursdays, and on all days at sunset must avoid groves and the sea and riversides. Charmed silk threads called bhārdori, literally the spirit-laden cord, are worn round her waist and abdomen, and, especially if any portion of the period of her pregnancy falls on or about the days of Divāli the Hindu New-year, which is considered an evil-spirit-time, she requires the greatest care. She is not allowed to go under the māndwa or alcove built before a house on marriage or other festive occasions. She must avoid marriage or death ceremonies, must not pass under the city gates, and must cross no river or sea. During eclipses of the sun and the moon particular care must be taken that neither she nor her husband, nor even the relatives of her husband, eat or drink or smoke or cut or clip or break anything. If any of them eat a pān or betel-leaf or even fold a pān the child is sure to be born with ears folded like a 'pān'-leaf: if the relation cuts or clips any thing the child is sure to have a deformed finger or a hare-lip. It is asserted that an obstinate husband of a pregnant woman, with a fool-hardy disregard for these customs folded a piece of cloth round his face during an eclipse, and his child was born with a face-covering or caul. If any member of the husband's family smokes during an eclipse the child born has a weak chest which gurgles like a 'hukkāk' when he

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

Seventh
and Ninth
Month Rites.The Behlim Vow.

the parlah or veiling) take the pots to the zenānah and arrange them in lines with each of the four big pots surmounted by three small ones the last pot topped with a nūryal or coconut. The pots are arranged in the principal room. Then rice and curds and chapitis or Indian bannocks and halwa or starched sweets are cooked and the Pātiha is repeated over the pots in the names of the dead of the family the ancestors and ancestresses, chiefly the zichūs that is the women of the house who have died in child-birth. When the spirits of the family dead are pleased the performance of the vows follows. These are the Bāla-Behlim-patti or infant spirit-laying an old institution now almost forgotten, the Kanduri or earthen dish rite, or the Nāos or boat-offering.

The Behlim or Bāla-Behlim-patti is vowed to be performed in the beginning of marriages, of salmisās or seventh-month pregnancies, and of bismillāhs or initiation. The woman vows that when the event takes place she will crush one or two or two-and-a-half seers of live coal. She accordingly observes a fast and sends word to the Phadāli or spirit-musician. He comes in the morning with a pair of nēzās, literally lances, bamboo sticks each about a foot long and half an inch thick with sharpened points. These the Phadāli leans against the wall on ground fresh plastered with cowdung, and goes away, leaving strict orders that the place is not to be contaminated even by the shadow of an unclean person. Towards nightfall a favorite spirit time the Phadāli returns. His arrival is the signal for the table cloth of the newest and finest white linen to be spread. On the cloth is served a grand repast consisting of all kinds of flesh (except beef) of all available kinds of fish and grain and fruit and milk and *sherbat*s. There is rice-bread and pulse-bread and millet-bread all unleavened, and pīlās and kichdīs with their condiments of kadi or whey-sauce and phulandi fried gram-flour drops and whey. Of sweets there are halwās of all kinds from the sweet-smelling tar-halwa raisined and saffroned to the coarse maḥlah or powdered sweetbread. There are also all fruits that the local market can supply from the mango orange and sweetlime to the homely custard-apple and sugarcane and coconut, even the despised woodapple and the bitter kamraḥ Averrhoa carambola. For relish there are in tiny plates and saucers fresh-gathered mint leaves with slices of cheese and gram-pulse soddened and salted. Next is a selection of *sherbat*s, rose-sherbat cream-sherbat almond-sherbat and shorbat with saffroned drops of wheat-starch glinting like gold and silver fish.

While the banquet is being spread the Phadāli places a censer full of frankincense before the two bamboo lances or nēzās, garlands them with flowers and tops them with little pennons of new red muslin. He makes a four-faced or chamukh dough lamp with a wick in each corner fed with ghi or clarified butter. When all is ready the woman who has registered the vow comes and stands on the clean square of floor with a cup of sherbat in her hand. About this time the sun sets and the time of breaking the fast is near. On her arrival the Phadāli opens one of the three packets of flowers jūi Jasminum auriculatum or mogra Jasminum zambac or chambeli Jasminum grandiflorum previously placed before him and untouched save by the person who has gathered them with purified body. After holding the flowers for a time over the fragrant vapour of burning incense the Phadāli begins to sing the seven sūclās to the accompaniment of his catgut guitar and lamhourine. These sūclās are hymns in praise of the souls of the prophets, the angels, the genii, the fairies, and the departed souls of the relatives of the vower. While each sūcla is sung the vower stands sherbat in hand, and at the end of each she gives the singer a piece and he drops into her sherbat-cup a flower from the packet before him. Thus when the seven sūclās are sung and seven flowers are dropped into her cup the woman breaks her fast with her sherbat having in the first instance swallowed the seven flowers. After thir Fātihah is repeated over the banquet and the Phadāli having eaten, the others including the vower come and partake of it. No one is allowed to carry a morsel outside of the room in which the banquet is spread. Even the crumbs are not given to a beggar but are carefully gathered in a clean white cloth and along with the four-cornered dough lamp are hurried in the outmost part of the house in which it was cooked.

When dinner is over the Phadāli strikes up a new strain calculated to entrance any of his hearers who are subject to spirit-possession. As a rule the lady who made the vow becomes possessed. If not she proceeds to the business of the vow the crushing of live coals with naked hands and feet. The quantity of coal vowed to be extinguished is brought and set before the Phadāli who lights it and fans it into a glowing flame. A round pit is dug in the floor and the burning coal is tilted into the pit. The vower comes and keeping time with the Phadāli's song proceeds to take the glowing coals into her hands and rubbing them with force crushes them into blackness. She then steps into the flaming pit and dancing with bare feet on the flames, seems without burning her soles to gradually stamp out the fire till the flaming fire is a heap of dead embers. Sometimes the Phadāli joins the vower in dancing on the coal, but as a rule the vower refuses to allow any one to interfere with her vow. Cases happen when women burn themselves grievously in performing these vows. But such cases are rare. When they occur, they are ascribed to the non-observance of the rules of purity and cleanliness in cooking the feast or in plastering the floor.

Sahnak or Bibi-ki-Sahnak The Lady's Faith Dish, commonly called by lower class women Kandūri,¹ is a rite performed by women in the beginning of marriages and pregnancies or in consequence of vows for recovery from illness. The rite consists in offering to the Lady Fātimah, the Prophet's eldest daughter, milk and sweet gruel or rice and curds. It is called sahnak or earth-dish, because, together with the milk and gruel or the rice and curds, about half a pound of quick-lime slaked by a mixture of water is served. None but women of unquestioned chastity may partake of this dish, and as the rite begins by the women eating the lime none but chaste women usually presume

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

The Nehlim
Vow.The Earthen
Dish Rite
Kandūri.

¹ The Ling-fruit, called in the Dakhan Sivalinga-popati, the red uncultivated hedge gourd being holy and searing aptly gave its name to a rite performed in the beginning of pregnancies. Though the practice is now discontinued it is believed that fruit of all kinds including the Kandūri were formerly offered and served with the earthen dish.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

*The Earthen
Dish Rite
Kandári.*

to attend. The eyes of a male, even though a boy, may not fall on the food while it is being cooked still less after it is ready, and the ladies who partake must eat only after ceremonially bathing and putting on clean raiment.¹ The mixed milk and gruel are served in a separate plate; but the chief viand the half-slaked lime is set on a round black earthen platter. The ladies, three five or seven in number, sit round the platter. The eldest lady opens the feast by driving her right forefinger into the soft pile of lime, hooking a large lump of the lime on her bent finger, and eating it. The other ladies follow her example. Lime does not burn the mouth of a chaste woman. If any woman's mouth is burned she is a pretender to purity and is driven from the feast. After the lime the ladies eat the gruel and milk or in some cases the rice and curds. Before the banquet is over, the collyrium and the black toothpowder missi pots are brought, and a vial of perfumed oil is set on the dinner cloth. The ladies tinge their eyelids, colour their teeth, and perfume themselves. Each of them receives a scarf of the value of Re. 1 to Rs. 5, a set of four to six pairs of glass bangles valued at Re. 1 to Rs. 2, and Re. 1½ in cash. The platter, with the remains of the gruel rice and lime, is sent round to their houses and each of them takes her share or as much as she likes. What now remains of the food and the lime are placed in the earthen platter which after dusk is laid at a cross-road as a spirit-offering.

*The Boat
Offering
Nāos.*

Nāos or boat-offerings are made to the great water-spirit Khwajah Khizr, the prophet Elias. The officiating priest of this rite is not the potter but the Bhishli or water-carrier. Boat offerings are almost always made in fulfilment of vows. The nāos or boats are generally two in number. They are bespoken at the Bhishli's who makes them of grass and bamboo chips about two feet long and a foot broad. When finished they look much like ancient galleys. Instead of a mast they have a conical superstructure of bamboo chips which is covered with new red muslin. In the afternoon the Bhishli brings to the vower's house the boats and dresses them with garlands and red cloth and burns frankincense before them. When he has finished his rites the women send to the Bhishli to place near the boats unleavened bread and wheat halwa or sweetened starch flour and milk and wheat gruel or dūd dalia cooked by a ceremonially clean and washed young woman, and carefully guarded against the shadow of any one ceremonially unclean. The Bhishli takes the bread, spreads on it a thickish layer of sugar and ghi, places some halwa on it, and lays it in the boat hid from sight by the folds of the new red muslin. He pours the milk and wheat gruel dūd dalia into a clean copper or earthen vessel. He next makes a four-cornered lamp of dough, pours ghi into it, places within it some wicks made of new red cotton yarn, lights them and carrying one nāo in his hand and giving the other to one of his assistants to carry he takes his position in the procession and with music

¹ The couplet runs:

*Mūn maile, sar se, sar mushe ākrud zā, r. h. d.
Sahnat mein shadail ai kr i khand z r. h. d. (M. and's Jaagury: Foot R in 17.)
My sickness is past I must bathe and wash my head.
To join, dear sister mine, the pure fire banquet spread!*

starts for the river side. Near nightfall he reaches the river bank. He sets down his sacred burden and opens the dūd dalia covers and pours some of the gruel into each of the boats. He then repeats the fātīha to the soul of the prophet Elias and while the Phadālis chant the praises of the water-spirit to an unearthly accompaniment on their catgut guitars which they twang with pointed stones held between the finger and thumb to the hum of a round tambourine, the Bhishti launches into the stream his frail red-sailed barks. As the boats are swept out of sight the Phadālis, the Bhishti, and the others spread the cloths and eat their share of the banquet or divide it and take it home. Besides the meal the Phadālis are paid in cash annas 8 to Re. 1 and the Bhishti Re. 1½ to Rs. 2½. The Bhishti is the priest as the object of the rite is the propitiation of the Bhishti's patron the water-spirit. For the water-spirit as for other spirits the Phadālis are the sole musicians. Though their instruments are rude and their voices often untrained and unmusical, in paying vows the Phadālis's music alone can be heard.

At the beginning of the seventh or ninth month of a woman's pregnancy, a party both of the husband's and the wife's kindred are called to the husband's house.¹ The women come about midday and the men about sunset. When the men have dined, the women dine by themselves in the women's room. At night a new piece of cloth is taken and in it are wrapped a rupee, some parched rice, and seven or nine kinds of fruit, one of them a cocoanut. This is touched by the wife, thrown into the lap of the husband and by the husband returned in a similar manner seven or nine times according to the number of the months of pregnancy. Besides fruit and parched rice, the packet contains money, in the case of the rich Rs. 11, in the case of the middle class Rs. 5, and in the case of the poor Rs. 1½ to annas 5. This money is made over to the husband's sister or sisters. The wife's relations then present her and her husband with rich clothes. Next morning after breakfast the guests return to their homes. A little supplementary rite is observed secretly by the women among themselves immediately the men have retired after the interchange of the fruit and grain packets. Some months before the salmūsa, say about the fifth month, the mother sends to the house of her son-in-law a tiny silver cup with corresponding miniature silver spoon and cover. This is kept by the husband's people and produced after the salmūsa ceremony has taken place. It is then handed to some aged female relative or to the mother of the wife who removing from the room any one she suspects of having the "heavy" or evil eye proceeds to uncover the bosom of the wife and to squeeze out some drops of milk. This milk is received in a spoon and turned and fingered and its thickness or thinness noted and discussed. From the thickness or thinness of the milk the ladies conjecture the sex of the child, if it is thin they foretell and often with certainty that a boy is to be born. When the cup has served its purpose

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

PREGNANCY.

*The Boat
Offering
Ndos.*

*Sex Dication
by Milk.*

¹ The number of guests brought by the wife's parents is fixed beforehand. It depends chiefly on the richness of the presents they have given the wife.

Chapter VIII.
Customs.

the milk is buried and the cup given as a gift to the sister or some other relative of the husband. These seventh or ninth month ceremonies are held only on the occasion of a first pregnancy, and being held immodest are not observed in strict families. The whole cost lies in the dinners. On these a rich man will spend Rs. 1000 or Rs. 2000, a middle class man Rs. 500 to Rs. 1000, and a poor man, if at all, Rs. 5 to Rs. 10.¹

BIRTH.

After the last pregnancy ceremony the wife goes to her father's house and stays there till her confinement is over. Among the rich and middle classes the servant who first brings his master news of the birth of a child gets a present of Re. 1 to Rs. 2. Soon bands of musicians and the hated kijidas or eunuchs² crowd round the house on the lookout for gifts. Some peculiar customs are observed at the birth of a child. No sooner does the little stranger appear than the midwife or dāi announces its sex. If a boy she says, nominally to save the mother a shock of happy surprise, but at heart to deceive the evil spirits of jealousy. It is only a girl blind of one eye. If a girl is born, the fact is stated since the birth of a girl can cause no jealousy. Boy or girl, the new-born child is laid in a bamboo sūpā or winnowing-fan while the more pressing needs of its mother are being ministered to. Then the midwife takes up the little piece of humanity and bestows on it attentions against which the little one remonstrates by low cries. The midwife presses all its limbs, opens by her finger all the orifices of its body, the ears, the eyes, the nostrils, and gullet. She presses the head into shape, straightens the nose, the arms, the thigh-bones, the fingers, and finally winding the navel or caudal string round the neck and rubbing warm ghee on its body gives the infant a warm bath. A piece of new red cloth is wound rather tightly round the little one's head and the young one is ready to hear the takbir or call to prayer. That its Creator's name may be the first word it hears, the father, as soon as the child is bathed, repeats in its ear the call to prayer, asān, beginning with the words Allāh-o-Akkār God is great.³ The infant is consigned to the care of the mother. The mother is not yet permitted to satisfy her maternal yearning to feed her new-born. The old ladies of the house are busy preparing the infant's first draught

¹ The cost of the friend's presents of clothes rings and money varies, among the rich from Rs. 10 to Rs. 50, among the middle class from Rs. 10 to Rs. 3, and among the poor from Re. 1 to Rs. 2.

² The eunuchs beat a drum and sing, while one of their number, with the help of a pad or pillow, acts the part of a woman with child, in child-birth, and nursing. At Ahmedabad not only the kijidas but some of the Mhawayyas or Hindu strolling-players claim presents on the birth of a boy with a pertinacity that is not satisfied till the whole of their demand is paid. The person claiming the gift is generally the clown or fool of the troop. He does not dance or sing, but by his obstreperous sallies of coarse abuse tries to make his stay so annoying that to get rid of him no expense is thought too great. To avoid the nuisance some people satisfy his demands at his house by sending him a present of 8 annas or a rupee.

³ Occasionally at the time of birth a Brahman is called and told to draw up a horoscope. He chooses certain letters, with one of which the child's name should begin. The paper is kept by the parents of the child and referred to on great occasions. The Brahman is paid Rs. 5 to Rs. 20.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

Birth.

consisting of aniseed, myrobalans, dried red roses, senna, and the droppings of mice or goats. This black broth is administered to the new-born instead of the mother's milk to purge the impurities that have gathered in the infant's system during its fetal existence. For hours after birth this physis is the only drink which passes the little one's lips. As soon as the first bath is over pieces of black thread are wound rather tightly round the child's wrists and ankles as its first armour against the evil eye. Its eyes or rather eyelids are stained with soot made of ghi and lampblack, its eyebrows are pencilled with soot, dots of lampblack are made on its little cheeks palms and soles, and a lock of its hair is gummed or waxed so that any one with an evil eye feeling them or looking at them may not meet an even glossy surface. Every morning and evening frankincense and the râi-ispan, corruptly termed râi-zband, that is mustard¹ and henna seed, is passed seven or nine times over the mother and the child from head to foot, and thrown into the fireplace and burned. Often red chilly seeds are thrown into the fire, especially to judge whether an ailment of the child is physical or spirit-caused. If the burning of the chillies creates no pungent vapour surely a spirit is the cause of the disease. If the burning chilly has its proper pungent smell then the ailment is natural. Sometimes a piece of alum is burned with the mustard-seed, the burning alum swelling into fantastic forms which to the wise show the sex of the person who owns the evil eye. During the five days before the chhatti or sixth-day celebration no fire or salt or water is to be given to any one from the house in which a woman is confined. To accustom the child to noise a copper or brass dish is struck at his ear before the father repeats to him the takbîr or call to prayer. To harden the child cold water is sprinkled over him before his bath.

If the travail of child-birth lasts longer than is natural charms and talismans are sent for and sometimes an exorcist gives a piece of a broken earthen vessel inscribed with some geometrical form or some name or some numbers. This potsherd is laid on the womb. Little children, boys and girls, of not more than eight are given a winnowing-fan heaped with grains of wheat with eleven coppers in it and are asked to stir the wheat and coppers with a wooden ladle and to pray to God for a speedy delivery. They ladle the wheat and pray with fervour, Oh Deliverer, a speedy delivery; Oh Deliverer, a speedy delivery. These innocent prayers of pure-hearted children are accounted most acceptable to the Pure Author of Being. As soon as danger is over the children are given a repast of milk and sugared rice or sweet wheat gruel and the wheat and money are distributed in charity to beggars. The expenses connected with a birth vary in the case of a rich man from Rs. 90 to Rs. 250, in the case

¹ In his Urdu Dictionary (Voca) Forbes says the seed of the henna plant is burnt at marriages to drive away evil spirits. Henna seed mixed with mustard seed is also burnt after a child is born particularly at the door to prevent demons from entering.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

NAMING.

of a middle class man from Rs. 20 to Rs. 30, and in the case of a poor man from Re. 1 to Rs. 50.¹

Early in the morning of the sixth day the child is named. The father grandfather or other male relative opens the Kuraán at a venture, and the first letter of the first word of the third line is the initial of the child's name.² Sometimes a name is chosen because it

¹ The details are :

Birth Charges.

ITEM.	AMOUNT.						REMARKS.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Midwife	Rs. 2	Rs. 5	Rs. 2	Rs. 3	Rs. 2	Rs. 1	Grain and sometimes a melon or much buffalo is also given. This only for a son.
Players	3	5	2	3	1	1
Eunuchs	1	2	1	1	1	1
Relations and Servants ...	10	20	5	10
Dinner	70	200	5	10
Total	50	232	14½	27	1	2½

In the case of a woman's first child the birth charges are borne by her father. In the case of a second or third child, the expenses are not more than one-half, and in the case of a girl no presents are given. On the day of a birth and the five following days among the well-to-do friends are expected to send presents of sugarcandy and clarified butter worth Re. 1 to Rs. 20.

² The class of names recommended by the Prophet are the slave or servant of Alláh or servant of the Most Merciful, Abd-ulláh or Abd-ur-Rehman. Among Sayads, boys' names generally end in Ali, as Ahmad-ali Akbar-ali Muntaz-ali, or in Husain as Amir-Husain or Fazl Husain, and sometimes though rarely in Shah, as Muhammad Shah and Taj-shah. Among Shaikhs, boys are called Umar, Usman, Muhammad, Mahmud, Husain, Ghulam-husain, Ghulam-ali, Gulam-akmal. These names are common in all families. The following are used almost solely in families of good position: Shams-ud-din, Moin-ud-din, Saadullah, Fazlullah, and the like. The names of Shaikhs are preceded either by the word Muhammad or Shaikh as Muhammad Isadullah or Shaikh Ghulam Ali. Among Mughals, boys are called Amir, Muhammad, Hasan, Husain, and Ali, the word Mirza always preceding and Beg following the name. Pathán boys have the same names as Mughal boys, only there is no Mirza and Khan is added instead of Beg. The commonest names for women are, for all classes and grades, taken from the Kuraán, such as Fatimah, Khadijah, or A'ishah. Among the higher Musalmán families such Arabic phrases as Best of women Khair-un-nisa, Noblest of women Amir-un-nisa, or Moon of women Badr-un-nisa are commonly used. Among Sayads a woman's name is followed by Begum; among Shaikhs by Dibi; among Mughals by Khanam; and among Patháns by Khatun. Besides these parents who have lost children or whose children do not live give curious names showing deformity or the most abject humility. Nathá is literally nose-bored is a name which accompanies the actual boring of the nose of the newborn child on the principle of deforming the child and so making it less liable to spirit attacks. Another name is Pá'já or Kachra that is refuse. Sometimes when a child is born after the death of several children the child is thrown into a grain-winning-fan sánpá with a lot of dirt or refuse and the fan is dragged outside the door with the child in it and made over to some other member of the family whose property the child re-enters the house. After his ride in the winnowing-fan the child is named Ghaslá, that is 'The Drugged'. If he is a Pathán this becomes Ghasitkhán, if a Sayad or Shaikh Afir or Sheikh Ghassu or Ghissu, names which occur among all ranks of Muslim and Hindú society in Gujaráit. These odd naming practices have their root in the belief that untimely births

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

NAMING.

had been borne by one of the child's forefathers or because the giver thinks it lucky. In the evening of the same day the husband's kindred, bringing gold or silver anklets or necklaces money or clothes, go to the wife's father's house. Sweet cakes are distributed, and, after sunset, the husband gives a dinner to the wife's relations. In the women's rooms the child and its mother are dressed in their best, and the midwife makes a six-cornered lamp of flour with as many wicks as corners. This is lighted, fed with clarified butter, and kept in a plate along with parched rice or millet jawāri, and fruit. The presents brought by the husband's friends are now offered, and a few small silver coins are given to the midwife. The young mother is then led to a casement and made to count seven stars. When this is over the husband's people return to their homes. The sixth-day ceremony includes another propitiation of the female relatives that have died in child-birth. Food untouched by unclean persons is cooked and the Fātiha repeated for the souls of women who have thus died and the food is distributed to the poor. The value of the presents made by the husband's friends would, in the case of a rich family, vary from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50 and from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 in the case of a middle class family. Among the poor, silver necklaces hansli, or anklets kadiān, and a pair or so of ornamented shirts worth Rs. 5 to 10¹ are sometimes given. The dinner and other charges on this occasion among the rich vary from Rs. 20 to Rs. 120, among the middling from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20, and among the poor from Rs. 2½ to Rs. 10.

or the death of the new-born are due to the anger or jealousy of uneasy family ghosts, chiefly of women who have died in child-birth with the main object of life unfulfilled. To this belief there attaches the further experience that the unfriendly ghost is easily outwitted. The ghost or other spirit on the lookout for the soul or life of the newborn hears the child is deformed or worthless and so turns its mind to some more gainful mischief. Further the ill-will of the ghost is not towards the child but to the child's father or mother. The ghost's aim is to harm the child of the father or of the mother, against the aunt's child the ghost has no manner of grudge. This is similar with the Jewish custom according to which the infant Joseph was supposed to steal a kash of one of his aunt's which being found on his person he was according to patriarchal law claimed by his aunt for a certain number of years. See Sale's Translation of the Kurān, Chapter XII. 106 Note (O).

¹ The details are:

Sixth Day Charges.

ITEM.	AMOUNT.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Dinner ...	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 100 0	Rs. 5 0	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 2 0	Rs. 5 0
Cake ...	5 0	10 0	1 8	5 0	"	2 0
Miscellaneous	5 0	10 0	1 8	5 0	0 8	2 0
Total ...	20 0	120 0	8 0	20 0	2 8	7 0

The cost is paid by the father of the child. These figures are for a first child whether a boy or a girl. Similar rejoicings are made in honour of the younger children, but at about half the cost.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

SACRIFICE.

On the seventh fourteenth or twenty-first day after birth comes the purely Muhamadan and by all classes carefully kept rite of sacrifice akika. In this rite there are two parts, the shaving of the child's head and the killing of one or two goats. If the child is a girl one goat, and if the child is a boy two goats are bought. Some friends are asked and a barber is called. When all is ready the father of the child, or some one specially named by him, at a given sign, as the barber passes the razor along the head of the child, draws a knife across the goat's throat saying, I sacrifice this animal or animals for the child named Wali, blood for blood, skin for skin, flesh for flesh, hair for hair. When the shaving is over, the child's hair and nails are laid on a flat half-baked cake and carried away to be thrown into a river. The barber goes round among the men guests and each drops a small coin into his cup. Before they leave, the guests are entertained at dinner.¹ The whole costs a rich man from Rs. 20 to Rs. 30; a middle class man nearly the same amount; and a poor man from Rs. 3 to Rs. 7.²

FORTIETH DAY.

On the fortieth day, in honour of the mother's recovery, nios or grass boats of the same kind as those made by the water-carrier for the seventh-month pregnancy ceremonies, are with music taken to the nearest water, a lamp is lighted, and the boat set adrift as a thankoffering to Khāja Khizr or Elias.³ The father of the child's mother presents her with clothes and the child with some small quilts and a cradle. The ceremony costs a rich man Rs. 22½ to Rs. 45, a

¹ In preparing the goat for cooking none of its bones may be broken. The bones must be separated from the flesh and buried. The flesh and skin are divided in three shares. One share is given in charity, a second is distributed among friends, and the rest, except that the child's father and mother and their fathers and mothers may not join, is eaten by relations.

² The details are :

Sacrifice Charges.

Item.	Amount.						Remarks.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Two Goats ..	Rs. 6 0	Rs. 8 0	Rs. 6 0	8 0	Rs. 2 0	2 8	In north Gujarāt the barber's fee is the weight of the child's hair in silver.
Barber ..	2 8	5 0	1 0	4 0	0 8	1 0
Dinner ..	7 0	10 0	3 0	7 8	0 5	4 0
Total ..	15 8	23 0	12 0	19 8	3 0	7 8

In holding this ceremony there is no difference whether the child is a boy or a girl, a first-born or a younger child.

³ Khāja Khizr is the water genius, the Patriarch Elias, skilled in divination who discovered and drank the water of life. Of the Patriarch's success the Urdu poet sings :

Khizr ki tarkhi pt ki dōh-hayit
Zindagani cōle khōi-ye-gi!
Iti tū hamē na hō suk Muntaz.
Arē pāni ē kūtī dhōy-gi!
 Like Khizr to drink the water of life
 And live for ever in loneliness.
 Oh Muntaz I would have none of this,
 With such water I would wash my hands.

middle class man Rs. 9½ to Rs. 22, and a poor class man Rs. 1½ to Rs. 4.¹

When the child is four and a half months old and able to take food stronger than milk, comes the ceremony of mutton-sucking botan, or as the Persians call it salt-tasting namak-chashi. Friends bring the child presents of clothes worth Re. 1 to Rs. 5. In the evening dressed in his best, the child is offered by his father's sister some rice and milk kkir, on a rupee,² and after the rice and milk he is given a piece of flesh to suck. The only charge connected with this ceremony is a dinner costing a rich man about Rs. 10 and a middle class man about Rs. 5. Among the poor the ceremony passes without expense.³

The child's first birthday sālgirāh is the next time for merry-making.⁴ As a rule only female relations are asked. These come and in the women's quarters pass the day in feasting and the night except in some strict higher class families in playing the drum dhol, and singing. Sometimes men also are asked, given a dinner, and afterwards entertained by professional musicians. Before they leave each of the guests gives the child Re. 1 to Rs. 5. The cost of one of the larger entertainments would be about Rs. 30 for the musicians and Rs. 20 for the dinner. This birthday feast is given only by the rich and by some of the middle class. Poor families do not give it.

When a child, whether a boy or a girl, has reached the age of four years four months and four days comes bismillāh. The taking the Name of God, a ceremony no Muhammadan neglects. On this day a rich man will feast from a hundred to two hundred guests. In the evening after the dinner is over, the child, covered by a skilfully woven flower-sheet called sehra, is taken to the men's room where the priest mulla, the guests, and a band of young children are waiting. The child is seated on a rich cushion or masnad, sweetmeats are laid before it, and of these two covered with gold-paper are given to it, and, after the priest, the child repeats the opening chapter of the Chapter VIII.

Customs.

SALT TASTING.

BIRTH DAY.

INITIATION.

¹ The details are:

Fortieth Day Charges.

ITEM.	AMOUNT.						REMARKS.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
	Rs. a.	Rs. a.	Rs. a.	Rs. a.	Rs. n.	Rs. a
Midwife	...	5 0	10 0	2 0	5 0	0 8	1 0	This is paid by the father of the child's mother, and is the same for all children.
Boat	...	2 8	5 0	1 0	2 0	0 8	1 0
Musicians	...	5 0	10 0	1 8	5 0	0 8	2 0
Presents	...	10 0	20 0	5 0	10 0
Total	...	22 8	45 0	9 8	22 0	1 8	4 0

² Though from this time he takes other food besides milk, the child is not weaned till he is twenty-one months old. This is according to a precept from the Kurān: From bearing to weaning let thirty months pass.

³ No trothing or ear-boring ceremony is observed in Gujarat.

⁴ The word sālgirāh or yearly-knot owes its origin among Indian Musalmāns to the Mughal practice of the emperor's mother keeping a silken string in the harem and adding a knot for each year of the emperor's life. Blochman's Āin-i-Akbari, 262 note 1.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

INITIATION.

Kura'in. When this is done, the priest chants some Hindustāni verses in praise of the child's parents, invoking blessings on the child's head, and at every pause the young band of choristers shout a loud Amen. While the children are eating the sweetmeats a procession is formed and the child is taken to kiss the tomb or dargah of the family guardian saint. As soon as the procession returns, presents are made to the child, silver or gold coins rolled in paper with the name of the giver written on it. As the child passes into the women's quarters the women guests crowd round it, each striving to be the first to take on herself the child's sorrows.¹ After this is over and the child has put off its flower-robe, the women guests amuse themselves listening to the women-players or domnis. This rite of bismillāh costs a rich man Rs. 300 to Rs. 1000 or even more, and a middle class man Rs. 100 to Rs. 300. Among the poor it costs Rs. 10 to Rs. 20.²

CIRCUMCISION.

At the age of six or seven comes circumcision or khutna.³ Friends send presents of sugarcandy, clarified butter, and sweetmeats, and,

¹ In this sorrow-taking bal-e-tila, the woman passes her hands over the child from head to foot and then setting her knuckles or finger-tips against her temples presses them till the joints crack.

² The details are:

Initiation Charges.

ITEM.	AMOUNT.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Mulla's fee ...	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 20 0	Rs. 5 0	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 0 8	Rs. 1 0
Dinner (a) ...	100 0	500 0	50 0	100 0	1 0	2 8
Clothes (b) ...	100 0	200 0	20 0	50 0	0 8	2 8
Procession (c) ...	100 0	200 0	30 0	50 0
Miscellaneous ...	20 0	30 0	10 0	20 0	5 0	10 0
Total ...	330 0	950 0	115 0	230 0	7 0	10 0

(a) Dinner for relatives only and very dear friends; not more than a hundred among rich and middle class and ten among poor.

(b) In the case of middle class and poor men the price of clothes is optional.

(c) The cost is the same for all children.

³ The khutna, though it is an order of the Prophet, and not of the Kurān, is as strictly kept as if it were commanded by the latter. Boys born without a foreskin are exempted from the rite. Among the Shi'ah or Daudi Bohoris, the Shi'ah Mughals and both Sunni and Shi'ah Arabs circumcision almost always takes place as early as the sixth day after birth. So much importance do these classes attach to this rite that operations are performed on girls as well as on boys. On the day of the operation the child is given an opiate. The simplest form of circumcision is mere amputation of the prepuce there being a difference between the Muslim and the Jewish rite, the Muslim being the simpler and less painful. In the afternoon of the day fixed for the ceremony a piece of new red cotton cloth about four feet square is spread in the middle of the floor of the room in which the child is to be laid up. A large copper tray full of soft ashes is set in front of the cloth. The boy who is to undergo the operation is in some families drugged with a little bhang (Cannabis indica) confection called madyān and brought to the room in the arms of a powerful male relative and seated on a wooden stool or charli a foot high over which a piece of red cloth is spread. The barber engages his little subject in conversation while he is held drawerless but with shirt on tightly by the strong relative. This is to prevent a nervous and obstinate boy from hurting himself by throwing up or about his hands and feet when under the razor. The barber begins by introducing into the foreskin a carefully smoothed bamboo-clip probe to feel and ascertain if no part of the foreskin adheres to the gland as it does in some rare cases when the operation becomes very painful. When though this is commoner among the middle than among the higher classes, the recovery of the child is celebrated with great rejoicing. Among north Gujarāt Musalmāns circumcision is neglected till an age bordering on puberty, when it is performed with a pomp and circumstance almost equalling those at a marriage, and all the preliminary rites like the birat or arranging the pots of clay, a remnant of the pot rites, are observed. In north Gujarāt circumcision is styled a shādī or joy-time, a word applied in south Gujarāt only to marriages. The expenses on the occasion of circumcision vary for a rich man from Rs. 150 to Rs. 400, for a middle class man from Rs. 120 to Rs. 300, and for a poor man from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20.¹

After circumcision come rejoicings and a dinner in honour of a boy or girl keeping their first Ramazan fast. This is chiefly celebrated by people belonging to the upper and middle classes. It is said that the merit of a boy's or girl's first fast passes to their parents. At its seventh or eighth year, a child, if strong enough to bear the privation, is made to fast one day in the Ramazan, and that day is marked by a dinner to which a choice party of friends and relations is called. The

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

CIRCUMCISION.

THE FIRST
RAMAZAN
FAST.

he finds that the prepucce is free he turns up the foreskin and having cleaned it lets it go. He then takes a pair of smooth bamboo pincers, a smoothed piece of bamboo with a long slit down to the middle of it and holding the ends open, puts them on the tightly-drawn-out foreskin. He performs this operation so dexterously that the application of the bamboo pincers and the pain caused by the pulling out of the foreskin is simultaneous with its being cut off by the sharp razor close to the pincers. Drawing out the pincers the barber calls to the surprised boy, "Here, master, don't you see the golden-sparrow" and when he succeeds in thus distracting his attention from the operation he takes out the pincers and spits out a dab of pan saliva on the ends of the foreskin now drawn up above the glands. He next sprinkles a soft redpowder on the wound to staunch the blood, sweeps in the detached foreskin into the red cloth which he gathers up and departs in the midst of the inbāraks and salāmats or congratulations of the boy's relatives. The manner in which circumcision is performed differs in many Islamic countries. In the province of Al Asir south of the Hijāz in Arabia circumcision by what is called "saikh" or scarification is performed. Burton (Alf Leilah, III, 90 to 92) describes it in the following terms: "The patient usually from ten to twelve years old is placed upon raised ground holding in his right hand a spear with its point upwards and its heel supported on his foot, so that the point may show every tremor of the nerves. His tribe stands around him to pass judgment on his fortitude and powers of endurance. The barber with a dagger sharp as a razor makes a shallow cut severing the skin across the belly immediately below the navel. He also makes similar incisions down each groin. He then tears off the epidermis from the cuts downwards and flays the testicles and the penis, ending with amputation of the prepucce. Meanwhile the spear must not tremble. When the ordeal is over the boy cries, Allāh-o-Akbar God is great and attempts to get up and walk home unhelped, soon falling from pain and nervous exhaustion. The more steps he takes the more applause he gains."

¹ The details are:

Circumcision Charges.

Item.	Amount.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Barber's Fee ...	Rs. a 2 8	Rs. a. 10 0	Rs. a. 2 0	Rs. a. 5 0	Rs. a. 0 8	Rs. a 2 0
Witto Tumban ...	10 0	20 0	2 0	3 0
Procession ...	100 0	150 0	50 0	100 0
Dinner ...	100 0	200 0	50 0	100 0	10 0	20 0
Total ...	212 8	350 0	104 0	208 0	10 8	22 0

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

THE PRESENT
HADYA.

dinner costs a rich man Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 and a middle class man Rs. 10 to Rs. 20.

Soon after the first Ramazan fast, when its Kura'án lessons come to an end, the child's parents give its teacher a present hadya. A small party is asked, and, before them, the child repeats the beautiful Chapter LV. from the holy book styled Súrah Ar-Rehmán that is: The Most Compassionate being a description of the bounties Alláh has showered on man. Except the teacher's present of clothes and money, worth Re. 1 to Rs. 50, a suit of clothes for the child, and parched rice almonds and walnuts distributed among children costing Rs. 1½ to Rs. 5 there are no expenses.

MARRIAGE.

Musalmán boys are married between sixteen and twenty-two and girls at ten to eighteen. Except in the case of a re-marriage neither bride nor bridegroom has any choice.¹

Betrothal.

When their sons reach manhood, parents generally consult professional matchmakers or go-betweens, women free to enter the houses even of the strictest. Some girl likely to make a good match is before long chosen, and the women of the lad's family pay a visit at the girl's home. After seeing her and talking together, the guests are offered a glass of sugared-water. This they drink if they think well of the girl, but if they think she will not suit, they decline. After drinking, in sign that they ask her in marriage, they drop some sugarcandy into the girl's mouth. Then they talk of ornaments and fix the day for the betrothal. On the betrothal day, both at the boy's and the girl's houses, there is a meeting of kindred. In the evening at the boy's house ornaments and sweetmeats are laid out on neatly covered trays and are generally with unsie sent to the girl's house. With the presents go the women of the bridegroom's family and a gay procession of children of their relations and friends. On reaching the bride's house the men and children who formed the procession sit in a booth outside of the house, or, if there is no booth, in some part of the house prepared for their reception. Here sherbat sugared-water is handed round, the person serving it, generally a relation or near friend of the wife's family, stating that it is in honour of the betrothal. Each person on putting down his cup drops, for the good of the man who has served it, annas 2 to Rs. 2 in the saucer. Meanwhile the women guests going into the house deck the bride with ornaments, put the troth ring on her finger, and cover her with a scarf dupalla. Then after drinking sugared-water and coffee, and getting flowers and rosewater they leave, taking with them trays filled with fresh presents, a handkerchief, a ring, a gold turban or mandil, and sweetmeats. A rich man's betrothal expenses vary on the bridegroom's side from Rs. 200 to Rs. 350 and on the bride's from Rs. 50 to Rs. 350; for a middle class man on the bridegroom's side from Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 and on the bride's from Rs. 50 to Rs. 80; for a poor man on the bridegroom's side from Rs. 50 to Rs. 90 and on the bride's from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50.¹ Except when things are hurried and the betrothal and marriage take place at the same time, the betrothal lasts for at least a year. During this time on every holiday gifts pass between the betrothed couple.²

¹ Among some families in South Gujarat a ceremony is secretly held when a girl reaches womanhood. It is called valai uda'na or donning the scarf.

Chapter VIII:

Customs.

MARRIAGE.

Some months before the marriage day the bride's female relations meet at her house and make ready the smaller articles of dress. Every night when their work is over, for about a fortnight before the marriage day, the women sing together to the accompaniment of the drum or dhol. Eight days before the marriage the bride keeps to one room and both she and the bridegroom are made to wear yellow clothes. Two or three days before the marriage both at the house of the bridegroom and of the bride a store of earthen pots is laid in. If the women observe the pardah or veiling the pots are arranged in the inner apartments, but if the women are not pardah they are arranged in a temporary booth or alcove in front of the house. That the object of arranging these pots is to house and so please ancestral spirits is known and admitted. Food is laid on the pots and the opening chapter of the Kurān or Fātiḥa is repeated. After the pots are arranged both at the bride's and at the bridegroom's, the women of the family, while female musicians sing songs, rub the bride or the bridegroom with grain flour mixed with oil and perfumes called ubatna. The chief ingredients in this cosmetic are the flour of washed wheat and mung (Phasoleus munga) turmeric and sesame oil. As this cosmetic has to ward off all the evil influences which hover round the bride and bridegroom every care must be taken that no element of evil enters into the guardian ubatna. To stop the approach of evil the hand-mill in which the grain is ground has its handle smeared with sandal paint and a mulhal Vangueria spinosa nut and some pin or betel-leaves and betelnuts wrapped in a piece of new red cloth are tied to it. Then seven suhāgans that is married women who have never lost a husband, sit to grind the grain and into the flour pour

¹The details are:

Betrothal Charges.

ITEM.	BRIDE-GROOM.						ITEM.	BRIDE.
	Amount.							Amount.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.			Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	F'm	To	F'm	To	F'm	To		F'm	To	F'm	To	F'm	To
Procession ..	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	Rs. 30	Rs. 50	Rs. 2½	10	Clothes for	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	Rs. 20	Rs. 30	Rs. 6½	10
Sweetmeats ..	20	30	10	20	1	2	Bridegroom. ...	30	50	1	1½	6½	1
Clothes ...	50	100	30	50	10	20	Rings ...	20	30	10	20	10	20
Jewels (a) ..	100	150	30	50	20	30	Sweetmeats ...	20	30	10	20	2½	10
Dinner ...	30	50	20	30	10	20	Dinner ...	20	30	10	20	2½	10
							Miscellaneous ..	70	100	1½	2½	1	2½
Total ..	250	350	120	200	43½	82	Total ..	190	320	42½	74	18½	42½

(a) Some of the poorest men borrow jewels or sometimes the bridegroom's mother gives up one of her ornaments.

² Each holiday has its set gifts. In each of the 10 days the man sends a scarf or pair of bangles and the girl a turban or coat. On the shabbārī they both send fireworks, and if a holiday falls in the rainy season the bridegroom sends wooden shoes with silver pegs and silver bells. In Ramāḍān some carefully cooked dishes and drinks pass between them.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

MARRIAGE.

clarified butter or sesame or jasmine oil. When the ubalna is ready henna leaves are ground in the same way. A square diagram is traced on the floor with rice and a stool is set in the square. The bride or bridegroom in a suit of her or his oldest clothes dyed yellow is led forth and seated on the stool. The ubalna, amidst the songs of women either the relations of the family or hired female musicians, is rubbed all over the body and henna is applied to the hands and feet. In rubbing on the cosmetic each of the seven matrons takes her turn. She puts a piece of candied sugar into the bride or bridegroom's mouth, throws a handful of rice over the bride or bridegroom's head, passes the mustard seed seven times over the bride or bridegroom's body, and takes on herself the ill-luck or balas of the bride or bridegroom by cracking the joints of her fingers across her temples. Finally she passes a piece or more over the bride or bridegroom, hands the coin to the musicians if hired or lays it at the foot of the stool to be given in charity and retires. When all seven matrons have performed their task a knife dagger or other sharp iron instrument and a lemon are handed to the bride or bridegroom which she or he is to be careful to keep till the bath on the marriage day. During these days to keep off the evil eye, a bracelet or a garland of gold must also be worn. Seven songs called tonas or charms sung by domnis or hired female singers before the julwah or unveiling of the bride in the presence of the bridegroom which form a portion of the marriage ceremony are said to possess special anti-magic and spirit-power. If the bride be spirit-possessed to the slightest extent the sound of the tonas makes the spirit instantly declare itself. When the bridegroom comes songs are again sung and his height is measured by an odd number of red and white braids. These braids are woven into a thick cord which is used by the bride as her trouser string. The bride and bridegroom's houses are put in order, painted or whitewashed, and outside of each house is built a booth or hall sometimes very splendid with gilt pillars friezes and cornices and hung with glass-lamps and pictures. The first post of the booth is driven into the ground after the point has been rubbed with sandal oil and enveloped with a piece of new red muslin in which are wrapped betelnuts betel-leaves and the lucky wedding midhal nut Vangueria spinosa. A coconut is broken and the kernel distributed among the workmen who built the booth and the members of the family. As the whole house is given over to the women this hall is for the time the men's room. For some days before the marriage, musicians are hired to play in front of the house. This is a time of great merry-making. One day, outside of the house for men and inside for women, earthen vessels are filled with the red and yellow colours used in dyeing cloth. In the evening the men among themselves and the women among themselves each with a little jar full of colour, chasing and waylaying, cover one another with the dye. At such times from Rs. 5 to Rs. 20 or at most Rs. 30 of colour is used. One amusement for the women during the days before a marriage is the twisting knotting and tying of silver rings into silk and gold thread wristbands kangna. Of these one is given to the bride and the other to the bridegroom, and after marriage each has to unravel the knots and twists in the other's bracelet. On

Chapter VIII.
Customs.
MARRIAGE.

the evening of the marriage day, the bridegroom's party send to the bride's with a procession of children in carriages and on horseback with music and led horses, a band of hired women and servants carrying as many as two hundred or more earthen pots painted in gold and green filled with sweetmeats and dried fruit, and trays with dresses.¹ On arrival the children are seated in the marriage hall or shed with the men and are treated with sherbat, each of the little guests dropping silver coins the smallest of which is a two-anna piece into the cup or saucer in acknowledgment of the trouble of the server who is often either a poor or juvenile relation of the bride. In her room the bride is bathed by the women of her family, clothed in new robes, and decked in some of the jewels. Then with trays refilled with clothes for the bridegroom, with henna menhdi and with the wife's chattels jakes,² the company goes back to the bridegroom's. On their return the bridegroom is dressed in his wedding clothes, and the furniture of what is to be his room is set in order. At nightfall, an occasion of much merriment, the sister of the bride comes to apply the henna to the bridegroom's hand. On one side of a screen or partition sits the lady and on the other the bridegroom and some of his friends. Only the bridegroom's hand should be passed under the screen. But instead of this many hands are thrust through, and the lady has to trust to her wit to choose the hand she should punish by pinching and the hand she should adorn with henna. Her mistakes are greeted with much laughter, and when in the end she paints the bridegroom's little finger with henna she receives a present of Rs. 5 to Rs. 10. When this play is over, the bridegroom's guests sit listening to dancing girls and buffoons bhānds or to a company of Arab Nativity hymn-singers called Maulādiās. Maulāds that is Muhammad-mas carols are gradually displacing dancing girls and buffoons. At the close of the maulād coffee, warm sweet-milk in small coffee cups, and sweets or sugarcakes called batāshās are distributed to singers and hearers.

About ten, the time comes for the bridegroom to fetch the bride. The bridegroom is clothed in a sehra or flower-sheet fastened round his head by a string which the father ties with thankful heart that to him has been granted the wish of every Indian Musalmān; May I live to tie my son's sehra knot. Then the father or some other male relation lifts the bridegroom on a horse, and with much music and followed by all his friends, he starts for the bride's.³ As he passes under her window the bride lets fall on the bridegroom some grains of rice. He is led before the door of the house, and is handed a cup of sugared-water by his brother-in-law to whom in ¹ This procession is called the bari or atcharak that is the present.

² Jakes or paraphernalia includes clothes, jewels, furniture and ornaments for a lady's sitting room and bedroom and a set of cooking vessels. This continues to be the wife's property, and has to be returned to her in case of divorce.

³ Both in south and north Gujarāt, among the rich, before the bridegroom's horse is carried a miniature garden buti, a three-sided frame-work of coloured paper with flowers and leaves put in tinsel or talc. Though some of these models are very elaborate, costing Rs. 60 to Rs. 200, they are made only to amuse the crowd, one of whom, before the procession reaches the bride's house, generally manages to seize the frame, and the rest scrambling for bits of it tear the whole to shreds.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

MARRIAGE.

return he gives Rs. 5 to Rs. 10. The women of the bridegroom's family and the wives of his chief friends follow the procession in closed carriages. On their arrival at the bride's they retire to the ladies' quarters, where, till the bridegroom is called in to see the bride, they are entertained by women singers domnis. When the bridegroom comes, those who do not appear before him, retire. The men of the bridegroom's party when they arrive, seat themselves in the brightly lighted marriage hall, the bridegroom's party ranged on one side and the bride's on the other. In the space between are three seats; one in front of his party for the bridegroom, one in front of the bride's party for her agents, and the third between the two for the registrar, the Kāzi or his deputy. The bridegroom if very young is carried or if grown is led to his seat and the bride's agents find their way to theirs. Then the registrar, seating himself, asks the bride's agents whether she, with a certain portion or mehar,¹ accepts so and so as her husband. If told she will have him, he takes the declaration of two other witnesses. He then, making the bridegroom repeat the creed, puts to him the same question. The proceedings are recorded, and the guests raising their hands offer the marriage thanksgiving. When the ceremony is over, the registrar receives a shawl and Rs. 5 his fee, and leaves the house taking his share of the marriage sugarcandy, trayfuls of which are distributed among all present. The hired musicians who so far have been silent owing to the presence of the representative of the law of Islām strike up a loud discordant peal.² Then, till the bridegroom is called to receive his bride, the men pass their time in listening to hired dancers and singers. When the husband is called,³ a dancing girl stepping backwards singing and keeping time by beating him with flower twigs, slowly leads the bridegroom into the ladies' quarters. Here she hands him over to the domnis or female musicians, who in the same way lead him to a seat. On his way to his seat the bridegroom is jealously guarded by his sisters or other near relatives from the onslaughts of the younger sisters or relatives of the bride who hang about unobserved, and if they get an opportunity dart on the bridegroom and if his female relatives are not on the alert wring his ears unmercifully. Soon the bride, veiled and arrayed in her wedding garment, is carried in by one of her relations and seated before the bridegroom, and a set of ceremonies,⁴ in which the rest of the night

¹ Though the rich sometimes give more, the portion or mehar is generally fixed at Rs. 17 the dower of Fātimah the Prophet's favourite daughter, or at Rs. 750, the dower of the Prophet's wife Aishah. Among the rich and the middle class the marriage-portion of a girl is what is legally termed the mehar mi'l or the portion of her peers, that is the girl's grandmother aunts and sisters.

² With the fee is also charged a mosque-fee of Rs. 1½, which goes to the person who serves as the warden of the mosque in the street where the bride lives.

³ In north Gujarāt the husband walks alone, and this at five or six in the morning instead of about three or four in the afternoon.

⁴ These seem to be the humorous survival of the eating together form of marriage. The bride, who should not voluntarily move a muscle, is by one of the musicians made to take in her hand a piece of sugarcandy, some pounded sweet-bread, or a dry date, then her hand is stretched out to her husband's mouth, and as he tries to secure the morsel her hand is drawn away. This in different forms with much merriment goes on for a long time.

passes, are begun. At dawn the bridegroom is for the first time shown his wife's face in a mirror, and from a Kura'in placed between them the chapter of Peace is read. This is the sign that the time has come for the bride to leave her father's house.

The cost of a wedding is, in the case of the rich, for the bridegroom's father Rs. 3000 to Rs. 4000 and for the bride's father Rs. 1500 to Rs. 3000; in the case of a middle class family for the bridegroom Rs. 1250 to Rs. 2250, and for the bride Rs. 700 to Rs. 1250; in the case of a poor family for the bridegroom Rs. 400 to Rs. 800 and for the bride Rs. 150 to Rs. 300.¹ After the marriage the husband with his wife and family pass some days in a garden-house spending their time in amusements and singing.

On each of the first four Fridays or châr jumâgis after marriage, the bride and bridegroom are asked to dine at the bride's father's house. On the first and perhaps the second Friday some of the bridegroom's friends and relations, both men and women, are asked. The cost of each of these feasts varies from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50 for a rich man; Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 for a middle class man; and from Rs. 5 to Rs. 10 for a poor man. In north Gujarât the young couple stay from the evening of a Thursday to the following evening. In the south they go on the Friday evening and generally leave next morning. Much is thought of these Friday dinners, and if they are not given, a man seldom visits his father-in-law's house. So too, after marriage, the relatives of the bridegroom and the bride do not visit each other till each party has once formally invited the other.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

MARRIAGE.

¹ The details are :

Marriage Charges.

ITEM.	BRIDEGROOM.						ITEM.	BRIDE.
	Amount.							Amount.
	Rich.		Middle.		Poor.			Rich.		Middle.		Poor.
	Fr'm	To	Fr'm	To	Fr'm	To		Fr'm	To	Fr'm	To	Fr'm	To
Marriage Hall.	Rs. 100	Rs. 200	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	Rs. 10	Rs. 20	Marriage Hall.	Rs. 100	Rs. 200	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	Rs. 10	Rs. 20
Musicians	10	20	5	10	5	10	Procession ...	50	100	200	40	10	20
Dancing Girls	50	70	20	20	10	20	Grooms ...	5	10	1	2	1	1
Servants	50	100	20	50	10	20	Dinner for Bridegroom.	50	100	30	20	20	20
Painted Sweetmeat Pots with dry fruit and sugar lozenges Kura.	200	300	50	100	20	40	Ornaments ...	500	1000	250	500	50	100
More ...	5	10	2	5	1	2	Clothes ...	300	500	150	250	20	40
Presents to Servants.	50	100	30	70	10	20	Servants ...	50	100	30	20	10	20
Dinner	700	1000	200	500	50	100	Miscellaneous.	100	200	50	100	20	40
Bride's Clothes	120	250	50	120	30	60	Friday Dinners.	100	200	50	100	10	20
Bride's Ornaments.	1000	2000	500	1000	200	400	Total ...	1255	2110	631	1102	130	251
Dinner after Marriage.	50	100	40	20	20	40
Miscellaneous.	500	500	100	200	50	100
Total ...	2115	1030	1077	2215	340	772

The practice of north Gujarât differs from this as, on the day after marriage, the bride's father has to feast the bridegroom and his family and friends.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

DIVORCE.

Divorce is at the option of the husband. Of the three forms of divorce, two are easily recalled, but in the third, which is called the severer ḡayn, when the word divorce is repeated three several times it is final until the wife has married and is again free. After divorce a woman cannot marry for three months, called the iddat or term during which the husband is bound to maintain her.¹

DEATH.

That death may not attack him unawares, or in a foreign land, is the wish of every Muhammadan. To one on the point of death the chapter of the Kura'n, telling of death and the glorious future of the true believer, is read, the creed and prayer for forgiveness are repeated, and a few beads of honey are dropped into the mouth.² After death the eyes and mouth are closed, the body is laid on a wooden platform, carefully washed³ and perfumed, and covered with a scented shroud of white cloth. For a woman to die in the evening is a hopeful sign of her future forgiveness. She has lived within the veil and within the veil she goes to her Maker. It is well to die on a Thursday or a Friday or any day in the month of Ramazan and on any other holiday. Death on a Wednesday is unlucky. Four deaths take place in the family which loses one of its members on a Wednesday. If the death happens at night the body is not taken away till dawn. Otherwise, so soon as it is shrouded and the friends have taken their last look,⁴ among the wail of the women⁵ all of whom stay behind, the body is laid on the bier,⁶ lifted on the bearers'⁷ shoulders, and borne away, the company of men raising the cry

¹ Divorce is much less freely resorted to by the Indian Musalman than by his more passionate and hot-tempered co-religionist of the Wadyahs or the cradles of his race and faith as he styles Arabia Persia Turkey and Afghanistan. The repugnance of divorce to the spirit of Islam is proved both by the Kura'n and the Hadith. The Kura'n by hedging it round with innumerable and complicated difficulties has made divorce as hard of attainment as it is easy of avoidance or abrogation. The motive of laying down the three months' period of enforced cohabitation has no intent or purpose short of placing within reach of the estranged pair an opportunity of reconciliation. The Hadith explicitly lays down that nothing is so hateful to Allah as a divorce while nothing pleases him so much as the manumission from slavery. Among the gentler classes of Gujarat Musalmans divorce is rare and both the parties to it are looked upon with opprobrium. A divorcee finds it hard to marry suitably a second time and a woman once divorced tries as far as she can to shun matrimony for the rest of her life on the ground of the homely zenānah proverb: Sej badshah se karam nahin badalte By changing the bed Fate cannot be altered. The dislike almost loathing with which an Indian Musalman looks upon divorce is so great that one of the strongest of his curses is: May she who has given me birth be thrice divorced or may my wife be divorced if I do so!

² The death agony is supposed to be the final temptation of the arch-fiend, who greets the thirsty soul as it leaves the body with the luring sight of a cup of sweets. If the soul falls into the snare the cup is dashed away and the tempter disappears.

³ The Sunnis unlike the Shiāhs use warm water to wash the dead. In this water ber or junbe leaves are boiled.

⁴ When the deceased is the head of a family his widow is brought in, dressed in her richest robes, to take a last look at her lord. A husband is not allowed to look at his dead wife.

⁵ The wailing of women is against the order of the Prophet. In Surat and Broach it is practised only among the poor. In north Gujarat it is common among all classes except Ambis.

⁶ Biers or janūzāhs are used only in south Gujarat, in the north the body is laid on a cot. It is unusual to lay the body in a coffin.

⁷ The bearers are never hired men, always the nearest relations and friends. An exception is made at the funeral of a married woman, when, unless she means never again to marry, the husband is not allowed to join in carrying the bier.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

Death.

In ilāha illallāh There is no God but Allāh, and trained singers chanting solemn hymns. Over the bier four bearers carry a piece of brocade called the canopy shamiānah.¹ Upon the bier is a shawl, green or other dark colour for men and red for women. The grave is either where the dead has asked to be buried or in the family burial ground. At the mosque the bier is set down in the outer court, the mourners wash, and, standing in a row, repeat the funeral prayer Allāh-o-Akbār God is great. They move to the ready dug grave,² laying the body in it, the head to the north and leaning on the right side so that the face turns towards Makkah. They lay clods of consecrated earth³ close to the body, and the mourners fill the grave repeating the verse of the Kurān, Of earth We made you, to earth We return you, and from earth will raise you on the resurrection day. They retire to the house of mourning and standing at the door repeat a prayer for the soul of the dead, and all but near relatives and friends who stay to dine, go to their homes. The duty of helping at funerals and of praying for the souls of the dead is solemnly enjoined on all Musalmāns and is carefully observed by them. Though a farz that is a divine behest, it is also a farz-i-kifāyah or duty which if attended to by a sufficient number of the Faithful does not demand the presence of all. Among the rich the clothes of the dead are given in charity and grain is distributed.⁴ Till the third day no food is cooked in the house of mourning. At Ahmedābād the friends and relations of the deceased send ready-cooked dinners. In south Gujarāt dinners called bhūthi are cooked at the house of mourning at the expense of near relations. On the morning of the third day after a death a feast called Ziārat is held. A large company of relations friends and others meet in the mosque where each of them, reading from small books a chapter of the Kurān, finish it with a prayer that the merit of the act may pass to the soul of the deceased. A sermon waaz is then preached by a Maulvi. After the sermon a tray full of flowers and a vessel with a sweet-smelling mixture and oil in a small metal or porcelain cup is passed among the guests. Each guest as the tray passes picks a flower and drops it into the vessel and the whole is poured over the grave. Sweetmeats or batāshas are distributed and the friends present shawls to the son or sons of the deceased, and before leaving the mosque and again on arrival before the house of the deceased, prayers are offered for his soul. After this among the rich and some of the middle class a dinner is given on as grand a scale as a wedding dinner. A man may without disgrace avoid this third day feast.⁵ But on the fortieth day,

¹ A burial of this kind takes place only in the case of the rich and a few of the middle class.

² The grave may be in one of three forms. The most common is a pit where the body is placed and earth thrown in. The other is a hollow formed by planks placed oblong. The third is a hole of soft yielding mud into which the body is gently left to sink. Coffins also are used, but only by the very rich.

³ This earth is consecrated by reading and breathing over it some of the last chapters of the Kurān.

⁴ North of the Mahi the grain is distributed at the house of mourning and in the south at the mosque.

⁵ At Ahmedābād the great dinner is given on the fortieth day. On the third day a small number of friends and beggars only are fed.

Chapter VIII.

Customs.

the fourth month, the sixth month, the ninth month, and the last day of the first year he must give choice dinners.¹ Under ordinary circumstances the expenses connected with the death of a leading member of a family are, among the rich from Rs. 600 to Rs. 1250, among the middle class from Rs. 300 to Rs. 600, and among the poor from Rs. 150 to Rs. 300.²

MOURNING.

The only form of mourning laid down by Muhammadan law is, in the case of the death of the head of a house, the strict seclusion of his widow. This lasts for four months and ten days and during that time the widow, unless she is forced to do so, never leaves the house. Besides this strictly Muhammadan observance, other customs have been adopted from the Hindus. As soon as life is gone, the mother and the widow of the dead break their bangles. The mother may get new bangles but except when they are of gold or silver the widow, unless she marries, never again wears bracelets or a nosering. In south Gujarat the women of the poorer classes, and in the north all except those of Arab families or of families entertaining strict religious opinions wail in Hindu fashion. In the north, too, when a woman first visits the widow, on seating herself she bursts into a wail. The chief mourner joins in the cry keeping it up until she is soothed by her friend. This custom is known as the munh dhānkna or face-hiding. The shortest term of mourning is six months. For the first forty days the rooms are stripped of their furniture, cots cushions and pillows are put out of sight, and all members of the household sleep on the bare ground and no food is cooked in the house. During the whole six months no holiday is observed, no gaieties attended, and no music heard. At the end comes the sag uthāna or grief-lifting, when some friend asks the family to visit him. For his nearest relations a man for

¹ This is no modern failing. Ovington (A.D. 1689) says the Mughals are very profuse in their funeral expenses, lavishing away at immoderate cost to their friends' memory enough to sink a rich fortune. Voyage to Surat, 245.

² The details are: Gujarati Muhammad's Death Charges.

ITEM.	AMOUNT.
	RICH.		MIDDLE CLASS.		POOR.
	From	To	From	To	From	To
Shroud ...	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 25 0	Rs. 5 0	Rs. 10 0	Rs. 2 8	Rs. 5 0
Perfumes ...	3 6	7 0	2 0	5 0	1 0	2 0
Gravestone ...	3 0	7 0	2 8	5 0	1 8	3 0
Water ...	2 0	5 0	1 0	2 0	0 8	1 0
Grain in charity ...	30 0	50 0	20 0	30 0	10 0	20 0
Fruit in charity ...	5 0	10 0	2 0	5 0	1 0	2 0
Third Day Cakes ...	10 0	20 0	5 0	10 0	2 8	5 0
Third Day Water ...	2 8	5 0	1 0	2 8	0 8	1 0
Third Day Dinner ...	20 0	500 0	100 0	150 0	60 0	100 0
Prayers ...	10 0	20 0	10 0	25 0	5 0	10 0
Fortieth Day Dinner ...	500 0	500 0	100 0	250 0	20 0	100 0
Anniversary ...	20 0	50 0	10 0	20 0	5 0	10 0
Tomb ...	50 0	40 0	20 0	30 0	10 0	20 0
Total ...	535 8	1237 0	278 8	624 8	135 8	279 0

Some very rich families for as long as ten years give yearly dinners each dinner costing about Rs. 560. None of these expenses except the actual burial charges are sanctioned by Muhammadan law.

about a year wears a white turban.¹ If young a widow wears some dark coloured dress, if old she wears white but never either yellow or red. In Surat widows often marry again; in Broach remarriage is less common; and north of the Mahi the practice is unusual.

The pilgrimage or haj to Makkah and Madinah is one of the five duties enjoined by Muslim law.²

A pilgrimage to Makkah and Madinah if he be a Sunni, and to Makkah Madinah and Karbala in Irak if he be a Shi'ah, costs a well-to-do Musalmán about Rs. 2000.³ But many go who cannot spend as much as this and a host of poor men hazard their lives in the attempt. On their return their friends travel as far as Bombay to welcome them, and the pilgrims distribute among them dried fruit from the holy place and water from Zamzam, the well of the Kaaba, sometimes even the dust of Makkah kept with care and believed to cure diseases.

Chapter VIII.
—
Customs.

PILGRIMAGE.

¹ In Surat this rule is not always kept.

² The five duties are: (1) to believe in the principal tenets of the faith, (2) to observe the five daily prayers, (3) to keep the fasts during the month of Ramadan, (4) to make the pilgrimage to Makkah, and (5) to give alms zakat. Of these the first three are binding on all, the fourth and fifth only on the well-to-do.

³ Among the Sunni trading Bohorás a man who has returned from the haj wears the Arab dress during the rest of his life. Among the Chundaligars a pilgrim on his return is fed at the expense of the community for three days and for five or six days more by his relations.

CHAPTER IX.

AMUSEMENTS.

Chapter IX.
Amusements.
FIELD SPORTS.

MUSALMÁN amusements may be brought under the three heads of outdoor exercise, indoor games, and music. Few Musalmáns have leisure or liking for field sports. Those who have, chase deer either with dogs or with the hunting pard. Horse exercise was once the favourite pastime.¹ But the love of riding has of late years grown less and the former practice of deer-hunting with spears has been given up. The only special horse exercise is brandishing the bhutáli or bhuneti, a five-feet long wooden pole the ends of leather stuffed with wool. Bullock-racing in light carriages, and betting on fights between rams, cocks, quails, and the red wax bills or surrkh, are favourite amusements.

GYMNASTICS.

The evening before dinner is the time for athletic exercise. The place is the gymnasium taállm,² under a master ustād, generally a retired soldier.³ The exercises are of two kinds the greater and the less. Of the greater there are three, baithak, sitting on the ground and rising with a spring; dand, stretching the body face-down nearly parallel to the ground, supporting its weight on the hands and toes and alternately straightening the arms and letting the chest drop between them; the third is dashing the body on the soft dust of the arena. Clubs mugdals, generally of blackwood and weighing from half a pound to ten pounds, are also much used, and the muscles strengthened by pulling chains and climbing polished poles malkham. Of contests of skill and strength are the exercise with the pala or long sword, with the lakadi or single stick, and another kind of fencing called pharigalka, the stick quilted with cotton covered with leather and the left hand protected by a little leather shield. The favourite trial of skill is wrestling, the winning who first makes his rival's back touch the ground.

¹ A good horse costs Rs. 100 to Rs. 1000. The favourite kind of horse is the Chotila or Káthlāvár. Black and dun are the pet colours and to several points about the lie of the horse's hair much weight is given. For a saddle horse trotting is thought a bad pace. The favourite steps are the amble rihrul, the caracol languri literally the monkey-step, and the pirouette thirkāna. To teach a horse these paces a jockey or chdbuk sawdr is paid from Rs. 10 to Rs. 50.

² Gymnasiums are found only in large Gujarāt towns. There is one in Ahmedābād, one in Broach, and many in Baroda. Till quite lately (A.D. 1879-80) there were six in Surat, great rivals with yearly competitions.

³ The master is paid by an entrance fee, or if his pupil is rich by a monthly present, and by gifts when his pupil learns the use of a new weapon, and when he gets married. The master also earns something by selling the tight short-drawers and waistbands worn by wrestlers.

Of indoor games the chief are chess shatranj,¹ cards *ganjifah*² both native and European games, and chausar or pachisi, the Indian backgammon.³ The favourite games of boys are kiteflying,⁴ marbles, and bat-and-ball.

Chapter IX.
—
Amusements.
HOUSE GAMES.

¹ As ordinarily played chess differs from the European game only in one or two points. These are that only the pawns of the king queen and castles can at starting move two squares; that the first move of the king, when not under check, may be the same as a knight's move; that only the king's and queen's pawns can become a queen; and that, if it goes on till only five pieces are left, the game is drawn. As played it is noisier than the European game. Each player has several friends to back him and every move is the subject of stormy discussion. Two other varieties of the game, the Persian and the Hindu, differ much from the ordinary chess. The Persian game is called sardja, played with more squares and pieces. The soribdsi or Hindu game uses the ordinary board and men, but with the rule that no covered piece can be taken.

² The native game is played by three players with eight suits of round cards, twelve cards to each suit that is thirty-two cards to each player. Of the eight suits four are major and four minor. The major are the crown tdj, the white safed with a mark representing the moon, the slave ghulam, and the sword shamsher. The minor are the bell chang, the red sarkh with a mark representing the sun, the hanker's note bdrat, and the ecko kumdash. In the major suits the values of the cards run, king first, cazir second, ten third, nine fourth, and so on ace being lowest. In the minor suits the values are, king, cazir, ace, two, three, and so on ten being lowest. The major cards of a suit are trumps. By day the sa of the sa are the superior ones, by night those of the moon. The person playing the sun may be paid in cards of either description, giving away the lowest ones. Before playing the cards are shuffled and then dealt. He who holds the sun starts the game in the day and the holder of the moon leads at night. The game of ganjifah is said to have been invented by the clever minister of an ancient king. The king had temporarily lost his kingdom and was living in concealment with his cazir and used to fall into reveries, while his hands mechanically and thoughtlessly caught the flies in which the wretched place of their refuge abounded. Catching the fly with one hand the king used to pluck first one then the other wing of the fly and throw it away. The thoughtful cazir unwilling to see his royal but unfortunate master falling into so mean a habit guessed that its cause was want of occupation for the brain and the hands. He set to work to contrive a pleasant employment for hand and head and ganjifah requiring the cards to be held in the hand and manipulated by the fingers, while the brain has also enough of occupation was the result.

³ The chief difference between chausar and pachisi is that in chausar the scoring is fixed by throwing three hand dice and in pachisi by throwing six or seven kwari or Cyprian moneta shells. Chausar or the four-limbed, takes its name from the cross-like shape of the board. Pachisi or twenty-five is so called because throwing with six shells twenty-five is the highest possible score. Chausar is played by men chiefly of the upper classes, and pachisi by women and by the poor. The game is played either by four players with four counters each, or by two players with eight counters each. In shape the board is like a cross of four rectangles, the narrow sides placed so as to enclose a central space square in shape. Each rectangle is marked like a chessboard eight squares long and three broad. Starting one by one from the middle line of his own rectangle and from the square next the central space, the player sends his four counters round the outer row of squares till they work back to the starting point. The difficulty is that as at backgammon the pieces may unless protected be taken up by the other player and have to begin again. The game goes on till three of the players succeed in working their men round the board.

⁴ Kiteflying kankarwa or patang udna is not only a boy's game but men of all ages engage in it with great zest. The kite of varying size and colour is square and tailless. The string is the common English sewing thread doubled or tripled strengthened with starch and sometimes sized with powdered glass. This sharp thread is used in kite fights, when each of two fliers tries to entangle and cut his rival's string. The price of a good kite varies from two annas to eight annas and the thread from four annas to two rupees the hundred yards. It often happens that a truant kite the string of which has been severed by its rival is run after and scrambled for by a number of youngsters when one who has the fortune to capture it is immediately pounced upon by other boys who dispute his ownership and in their endeavour to dispossess him of it a free fight ensues and the kite is torn to pieces. This is kiteflyer's law.

Chapter IX.
Amusements.
HOUSE GAMES.

Among the well-to-do women only have leisure for amusing themselves. Those women who have leisure pay and receive visits, and except at Ahmedabad play at cards and backgammon and some in south Gujarat are clever at chess. Girls have their dolls to look after, sometimes in rich families marrying them with great pomp at the cost of ten to a hundred rupees. They also play hunt the slipper ankh nichāni, blindman's buff ankhi-chūhi literally the blindmouse, and phudadi merry-rounders in which two girls clasp hands and standing face to face whirl round quickly till one of the whirlers is tired.

MUSIC.

In spite of the Prophet's dislike of music and the feeling of disgrace which attaches to its practice, in all classes of Gujarat Musalmāns both men, and, except in Ahmedabad, women are to be found with taste and skill in music.¹ Among the middle and upper classes amateur musicians learn the guitar, and though singing is held dishonourable, some men among the upper and middle classes have fine and well trained voices and sing in private or before one or two friends. Their songs are of three kinds, Hindi love songs, sentimental songs in Hindustāni, and odes sometimes in Persian. Some of the higher and many of the lower classes play the guitar. The women of the higher classes seldom learn either to sing or to play. But among the middle and lower orders, on occasions of joy they ask some of their friends to come and together sing Hindustāni and Hindi songs and sonnets, one of them generally accompanying on the drum dhol.

ACTING.

Of the stage there is little to say. Though fond of seeing Hindu plays, Gujarat Musalmāns never themselves act.

READING.

Both among men and women a considerable share of their leisure is passed in reading or hearing books read. The books they read, partly from choice and partly because Hindustāni books of any other kind are very scarce, are love stories in prose and verse. Many of these books are not such as, according to Musalmān ideas, women should read, and in most families are as far as possible kept out of the women's quarters. Others they are allowed to have, either themselves reading them or hearing them read by some well educated woman.²

¹ Besides the dancing women, the buffoons bhānds, and the singing men who come chiefly from Upper India there are two special classes of trained Musalmān musicians. These are the domis who play the dhol, a kind of drum and cymbals, well behaved women who are admitted into the ladies' quarters. The other class are the daughters of poor families placed by their parents in some rich household. These girls called gayas or singers are taught to sing and to dance and some of them to play the violin and others the tambourine. They are supported by the master of the house getting small presents of clothes and money besides food. They have now as a class almost entirely disappeared in Gujarat.

² Besides religious books, those generally read by women are verse and prose romances such as the Masnavi-Mir-Hasan and the Gul-i-Nakārī. Of modern books one is found in almost every city zendāsh, the Mirāt-ul-Urus or Mirror of Brides, a tale in pure Delhi Hindustāni which, with much force and wit, traces the lives of two sisters, one of them educated the other without education. Translations of English standard novels have been made of late by Musalmān scholars and these are in great demand both in the zendāsh and among these ignorant of English.

CHAPTER X.

COMMUNITY.

Of the close brotherly sympathy among all true believers enjoined by the Kur'án and the Prophet this at least remains, that other things being equal, a Musalmán prefers a brother-Moslim to a Hindu or to a Pársi. About A.D. 1800 in south Gujarat some Wahhábi missionaries, by slow and cautious preaching, stirred up a keen Musalmán spirit. Many of the people gave up their favourite customs, even music at their weddings. But Manlavi Liákat Ali, the leader, one of the chief 1857 rebels, was caught, and the movement came to an end. The Wahhábi doctrines fell into disfavour, and, though they show signs of revival, at present (A.D. 1898) the preference for a fellow-Musalmán is said to be too weak to hold its own when self-interest is even slightly at stake.

At least among the more educated the difference of faith between Sunnis and Shiáhs does not prevent friendship or even marriage connections. A Shiáh says an unprejudiced be-tuássub Sunni is half a Shiáh; and the Sunni returns the compliment by saying that a Shiáh without enmity, be-tabarra, against the three disciples of the Prophet, is unless a Bohora, no Shiáh. On the other hand not only is there nothing in common between a Sunni Musalmán and a Shiáh Bohora, but there is a mutual feeling of hatred which the rough lower class Sunni generally takes little pains to hide. In north Gujarát especially, the feeling is so strong that the Shiáh Bohorás are not looked upon as Muhammadans. In Ahmedábád a Sunni Musalmán will not, if he can help it, eat or drink with a Shiáh Bohora.

A closer bond than religion, either sameness of descent or of calling, unites the members of many classes. These for the most part, though not in all cases, marry among themselves and form a union jamát with, as a rule, a headman mukhi or patel. Each union has its rules, generally social, but sometimes connected with their calling. The rules are enforced by fines, and from this and other sources is formed a fund, chiefly spent in yearly public feasts, but also at times used to help distressed and destitute members.

Besides their religious and social unions, all classes of Musalmáns join for amusement. Among the rich and well-to-do, young men commonly agree to meet either in a hired room, or by turns at their own houses, and spend the evening in talking smoking and reading. The poor have their clubs with a president and rules enforced by fines. They meet on the evenings of certain days, each in turn entertaining the company with tea and playing the drum or dhól and guitar. In A.D. 1877 so keen an interest was felt in the Turko-Russian war that several Muhammadans formed clubs and reading-rooms where Hindustáni papers were kept and read to those who came to listen.

Chapter X.
Community.
IN RELIGION.

IN CALLING.

IN AMUSEMENT.

CHAPTER XI.

PROSPECTS.

Chapter XI.
Prospects.

THE want of thrift and of forethought, which, more than idleness or unfitness for work, depresses the majority of Hindustāni-speaking Musalmāns, is probably in part the result of their not knowing how to read or write either Hindustāni or Gujarāti. With most children their book learning begins with the bismillah or initiation ceremony, that is at the age of four years four months and four days, and ends about seven with the hadi or repeating a chapter from the Kurān. After this a few of the well-to-do send their children to the maṣlvi to be taught to read and write Persian. But among Musalmāns their own teaching supplies no practical knowledge of either Hindustāni or Gujarāti.¹ Until lately there was very little special State provision for teaching Hindustāni. But within the last ten years (A.D. 1887-1897) this branch of education has made a marked advance. The number of primary Hindustāni schools has risen from six in A.D. 1866 to forty-eight in A.D. 1897. Altogether in A.D. 1866 there were 377 Musalmāns on the rolls of the Government Urdu schools of the five Gujarāt districts as against 4102 in 1896-97.

Though there is no Gujarāt Hindustāni newspaper, those published in Bombay and Lakhnau, especially since the Turko-Russian war (A.D. 1877), have many Gujarāt subscribers. At their mosques and public dinners, famine and plague management, taxation, and other topics are discussed, and in country places the people expect from their spiritual guides something of politics as well as of religion. On the whole the Gujarāt Musalmān seems fairly prosperous. The Gujarāti speakers are well-to-do, and the long-depressed Hindustāni speakers are now gaining by the introduction of steam factories, and, in the matter of education, show a growing wish to have their children taught to read and write.

¹ Among the poor boys go to the Mulla to be taught. Among the rich both boys and girls have a tutor akkund at their homes. All begin to learn from a spelling book with syllables of words from the Kurān. When this is done, they begin the Kurān, spelling it and learning the words by rote. With the Kurān the book-learning of most ends. Others who are sent to the Maṣlvi, begin Persian, and in some cases attain perfection in it. A very few pass on to Arabic. Most girls learn a part of the Kurān, and among the rich are taught needle-work and sewing. A few ladies are literary, having a knowledge of Hindustāni and Persian. Among the daughters of the poor a few learn a little Hindustāni reading and writing. But as a rule as soon as they can be of use, their time is spent in house work.

GUJARÁT PÁRSIS

FROM THEIR

EARLIEST SETTLEMENT TO THE PRESENT TIME

(A. D. 1893)

BY

KHARSEDJI NASARVANJI SEERVAI

AND

BAMANJI BEHRAMJI PATEL.

THIS Account of the Pársis of Gujarát was written by the lato Mr. Kharshedji Nasarvanji Seervai, J.P., Income Tax Collector, Bombay, assisted by Mr. Bamanji Behramji Patel, J.P., Author of the "Pársi Prakásh," who greatly helped in furnishing materials for the Account. The Appendices relating to the Firo Temples and Towers of Silence are mainly the contributions of Mr. Patel.

July 1899.

JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

PÁRSIS.

GUJARÁT POPULATION.

PARSIS.¹

THE Pársi population of Gujarát is estimated according to the census of A.D. 1891 to be 34,411. Of these 12,757 are in the district of Surat, 3273 in Broach, 835 in Ahmedábád, 153 in Kaira, 108 in the Panch Máhals, 14,905 in His Highness the Gackvár's territory, and 2380 in the Native States of Kachh (118), Pálanpur (205), Mahi Kántha (8), Káthiáwár (908), Rewa Kantha (386), Cambay (137), and the Surat Agency (618). To this number are to be added 47,458 in Bombay City, 3920 in the district of Thána, 2026 in Poona, 1403 in Karáchi, 2007 in other British districts, and 131 in the Native States of the Bombay Presidency. The total strength of Pársis in the Bombay Presidency is 91,361.

SECTION I.—EARLY HISTORY.

There are three periods in the history of Gujarát Pársis, six hundred years of prosperity from the beginning of the eighth to the beginning of the fourteenth century, a century of depression (A.D. 1300-1400), and about five hundred years of revival and steady progress. According to a poetic account known as the *Kissah-i-Sanján*² after the Arab victories at Kádesia (A.D. 638) and Nahávand (A.D. 641) the kingdom of Persia passed from Sháh Yazdezard and the land became desolate. The faithful and their priests, leaving their gardens halls and palaces, hid themselves in the hills for a hundred years. At last as their life in the hills was one of much hardship, the Persians who kept to their old faith moved to the coast and settled in the city of Ormuz.³ After they had been in Ormuz for fifteen years the enemies of their faith again troubled the Pársis. A learned priest skilful in reading the stars advised them to leave Persia and seek safety in India.⁴ Following his counsel they launched their Introduction.

Pársis.

CENSUS
DETAILS.
Strength,
A.D. 1891.

Section I.

EARLY HISTORY.

¹ The name Pársi means the people of Párs or Fárs, the south-west province of Irán or Persia whose capital is now Shiráz.

² This account was written about A.D. 1600 by a priest named Behman Kekobád Sanjína of Navsári. It is translated in the B. B. R. A. S. Jour. I. 167-191, and is the basis of Auquetil du Perron's sketch. Zend Avesta, I. cccxviii.-cccxxiii.

³ The port of Ormuz was at this time on the mainland. In the middle of the tenth century Ibn Haukal (A.D. 950) (Onseley's Oriental Geography, 342) calls it the emporium and chief seaport of the merchants of Kirmán. It had mosques and market-places and the merchants lived in the suburbs. In A.D. 1303 to escape the Tartars some Arabs settled in the island of Jeran about five miles from the mainland and called it Now Ormuz (Alsicola's Persia, I. 361; Kerr's Voyages, VI. 104). The island soon became a place of great trade and under Arab management grew so rich that the saying arose If the earth is a ring Ormuz is its jewel. The island was taken by the Portuguese in A.D. 1608 and held by them till A.D. 1622. In that year the Portuguese were driven out by the Persians and English. Trade passed to Gombrán or Bandar Abbas and has never returned to Ormuz.

⁴ Westergaard says (Zend Avesta, I. 22): It may very well have been the profits of trade not persecution that brought the Pársis to Western India. The Persian connection with India was very old, and for some centuries before the Arab conquest of Persia it had grown very close. In mythic times there was the religious connection of Zoroaster (not later

Section I.

Parsis.

EARLY HISTORY.

First Settlement in India,
About A.D. 700.

ships, put their wives and children on board, set sail and steering for India dropped anchor at the island of Diu on the south coast of Káthiáwár. They landed and settled for nineteen years. Then an aged priest reading the stars told them that they must leave Diu and seek another abode. They started gladly and set sail for Gujarát. On the way they than B.C. 1000; Hrug's Essays, 200) with India and the Bráhmán Tehengrighat) who was sent back to convert his countrymen, and Firdusi's story of prince Iskandár, the son of Gushtasp, who was so keen a believer in Zoroaster that he persuaded the emperor of India to adopt fire worship (Elliot's History, V, 568). The Hindu account of the introduction of fire-worshipping priests from Persia into Dwárka in Káthiáwár (Reinaud's Mémoire sur l'Inde, 391-397) probably belongs to the sixth century A.D. (Compare Appendix B. The Gujar). There was also a very early political connection in the conquests of North India, which according to Persian writers have been repeated from time to time since B.C. 1729 (Troyer's Rajatarangini, II, 441). In historic times the Panjáb formed part of the Persian dominions from its conquest by Darius Hytasp about B.C. 610 till the latter days (B.C. 330) of the Achemenean dynasty (Masudi's Ancient Monarchies, IV, 433). About the beginning of the Christian era Kanishka, the Indo-Scythian ruler of the Panjáb, from the fire altar on some of his coins, seems to have adopted the religion of the Vingi (Lassen in J. B. A. Soc. IX, 456; Prince's Notes on Historic Researches from Baktrian Coins, 106). As regards the south of India, Ptolemy's (A.D. 150) mention of Bráhmáni Mogi has been thought to show a connection with Persia, but the Chinese word mag or son seems a simple and sufficient explanation. Closer relations between India and Persia date from the revival of Persian power under the Sassanian kings (A.D. 226-650). In the fifth century the somewhat mythic visit of the Persian prince Behrám Gor (A.D. 436), probably to ask for help in his struggle with the White Huns (Wilson's Ariana Antiqua, 363), his marriage with a Hindu princess, and according to Hindu accounts, his founding the dynasty of the Gardhabin kings, was a fresh bond of intimacy (Wilford, As. Res. IX, 219; Masudi's Prairies d'Or, II, 191; Reinaud's Mémoire sur l'Inde, 112; Elliot's History, II, 169). In later times both Naushirván the Just (A.D. 531-579) and his grandson Parviz (A.D. 591-628) were united by treaties and by the interchange of rich presents with the rulers of India and Sind (Masudi's Prairies d'Or, II, 201). In connection with these treaties it is interesting to note that Naushirván's embassy to Pulikeśi II, the ruler of Badami in the Southern Murráthá Country, is believed to be the subject of one of the Ajanta cave paintings, and another of the pictures is supposed to be copied from a portrait of Parviz and the beautiful Shirin. (Fergusson in Burgess' Ajanta Notes, 92.) According to one account, early in the seventh century a large body of Persians landed in Western India, and from one of their leaders, whom Wilford believed to have been a son of Khosrú Parviz, the family of Udepur is supposed to have sprung (Gladwin's Ain-i-Akhbari, II, 81; Dr. Hunter in As. Res. VI, 8; Wilford in As. Res. IX, 233; Prince in Jour. Ben. A. Soc. IV, 684). Wilford held that the Konkánast Bráhmáns were of the same stock. But though their origin is doubtful, the Konkánast and Persia were at this time very closely connected by trade. Kosmas Indikopleustes (A.D. 545) found the Persians among the chief traders in the Indian Ocean (Migne's Patrologie Cursus, lxxviii, 446; Yule's Cathay, I, clxxvii, clxxix.), and his statement that the Kalyán Christians (Yule's Cathay, I, clxxi.) had a Persian Bishop points to close relations between Thána and the Persian Gulf. Shortly after the time of Kosmas the leadership in trade passed from the Romans to the Persians, and fleets from India and China visited the Persian Gulf (Reinaud's Abulfeda, I, II, cccxxxiii, iv.). It was this close connection between West India and Persia that in A.D. 638 (II, 16) led the Khalif Umar (A.D. 634-643) to found the city of Basra partly for purposes of trade and partly to prevent the Indian princes sending help to the Persians (Troyer's Rajatarangini, II, 449, and Chronique de Tabari, III, 401), and in the same year (A.D. 638-639) prompted the despatch of a fleet to ravage the Tháná coasts (Elliot's History, I, 415). Both Tabari (A.D. 833-921) and Masudi (A.D. 900-950) state that the district round Basra and the country under the king of Oman were considered by the Arabs to be part of India (Chronique de Tabari, III, 401; Prairies d'Or, IV, 226), and in the seventh century it is noticed that Indians were settled in the chief cities of Persia enjoying the free exercise of their religion (Reinaud's Abulfeda, I, II, cccxxxiv.). It is worthy of note that from the sixth century, when they began to take a leading part in the trade of the East, Persians not only visited India but sailed in their own ships as far as China were overtaken by a tempest; and the priests in fear of shipwreck prayed for help to the angel Behram. The storm fell and a gentle breeze brought them safe to shore near Sanjān. One of the priests went as spokesman to Jādī Rānī, apparently a Yāday chief of south Gujarāt, and asked permission to settle in the land. The chief afraid of so large a body of armed strangers called on the priest to explain their religion and customs. The priest told him that they honoured the cow, water, fire, the sun and moon, that they wore a sacred girdle, and had strict rules about the ceremonial impurity of women. He promised that they would do no harm and would help the chief against his enemies. The chief was still somewhat afraid, but on their agreeing to learn the language of the country, to make their women dress like Hindu women,¹ to cease to wear arms, and to hold their marriages at night, he allowed them to choose a spot for their settlement. A temple for the holy fire of Behram² was begun and by the help of the Hindu chief was soon finished. The settlement prospered, the management of its affairs was left in the hands of the faithful, and the desert and forest grew as rich as Itān.

According to this account the Pārsis settled at Sanjān in the year A.D. 775. But among the Pārsis the accepted date for the settlement is A.D. 716, and this though of doubtful authority is supported by the date A.D. 721 at which the first fire temple is said to have been finished.³ The truth would seem to be, as Wilford has suggested, that the poetic account has mixed the history of at least two bands of refugees, one who fled from Persia after the final defeat of Yazdegerd in A.D. 641,⁴ and the other who were driven away about A.D. 750 by the increased religious strictness that prevailed under the first Khalifs of the Abbasid family.⁵ Two separate bodies of settlers are required not only to explain

Section I.

Pārsis.

Est. 11.
H. T. 11.
A.D. 716.

Settlement
at Sanjān,
A.D. 716.

(Reinard's Ahnfelda, I-II. cccxxxiii.). About the time when they came to India Pārsis were settled in China as missionaries, traders, and refugees. Anquetil du Perron (Zend Avesta, I. cccxxvi.) speaks of Persians going to China in the seventh century with a son of Yazdegerd. According to Wilford (As. Res. IX. 235) another party of refugees went to China in A.D. 750 when the dynasty of the Abbāsid Khalifs began to rule. In A.D. 758 the Arabs and Persians were so strong in Canton that they stirred up a riot and plundered the city (Reinard's Ahnfelda, I-II. cccxxxv.). In A.D. 815 there is a mention of Mahayas or Mobes in Canton (Yule's Cathay, I. xvi.), and about sixty years later Masudi notices that there were many fire temples in China. (Principes d'Or, II. 86.)

¹ The ancient Persians were most particular not to let their women appear in public. Rawlinson's Ancient Monarchy, IV. 196. The correctness of this statement is doubtful. Porter's Travels, II. 176.

² The fire of Behram, Ateah Behram, is specially holy; the ordinary sacred fire in village temples is less sacred and is called the fire of fires Ateah adaran. The range in fire, after many wanderings, is now (A.D. 1898) at Udrādk about fifteen miles south of Balāsr.

³ Wilson's Parsi Religion, 357; Romer in J. R. A. Soc. IV. 360. The authority for the date A.D. 716 is a pamphlet written in 1826 on the Shenshalī and Kālmī date question by a branch high priest named Dastur Asprindārji Kāmdinji. He gives the Hindu date Samvat 772 Shrawan Sudi 9th and the Pārsi date Roz Behman Mahā Tir. The Hindu year corresponds with 85 Yazdegerd and with the Christian year A.D. 716. Mr. Kharshedji Rastuvji Kāma has discovered that these Hindu and Pārsi days do not fall together till the Christian year A.D. 936. He suggests a simple change in the Pārsi day from Roz Behman Mahā Tir into Roz Tir Mahā Behman, which gives the Hindu day Shrawan Sudi 13th Samvat 772 or within four days of the accepted time.

⁴ Ouseley (Persia, II. 317) mentions that a Pārsi revolt in A.D. 618 was followed by great severities.

⁵ Asiatic Researches, IX. 235; Jōdr. B. R. A. Soc. I. 180. Westergaard says (Zend Avesta, I. 22) the first emigrants must have been followed by fellow-believers from Persia.

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.

the two sets of dates (A.D. 716 and A.D. 775), but to account for the very sudden increase which the poetic account describes in the strength and importance of the original band of refugees.

After they were firmly established at Sanjān the Pársis spread as settlers and merchants north to Navsári, Variáv, Broach, Ankleshwar, Vánkánir, and Cambay,¹ and south to Thána and Cheul about twenty miles south of Bombay. Of Pársis of the early part of the tenth century there are some traces in Pehlvi writings in one of the Kanheri caves in Sálsette near Bombay. These writings were long thought to be forgeries, but the latest opinion seems to show that they are genuine and are the names of a party of Pársi pleasure-seekers who visited the Kanheri caves early in the tenth century.² About the same time as these Pehlvi writings at Kanheri (A.D. 916) Masudi notices that there were many fire temples in Sindh and in India,³ and about fifty years later fire-worshippers and fire temples are mentioned at Cheul.⁴ Towards the close of the eleventh century Pársis were one of the chief classes of traders in Cambay.⁵ The Navsári settlement is said to date from A.D. 1142. There were Pársis in Ankleshwar in A.D. 1258, as a copy of the Visperd was made there in that year,⁷ and they must have been settled at Broach before A.D. 1300, as there is a Tower of Silence near Dehgaon dated A.D. 1309, and there is a still older tower near Vejālpur.⁸ The dates of the settlement at Vánkánir and of the ill-fated colony at Variáv are unknown.⁹ Sanjān though sometimes confounded with the place of the same name in Kachh is mentioned by most Arab travellers of the tenth and eleventh centuries. No special reference to its Pársis has been ¹ According to some traditions the settlements at Cambay and Variáv were as old as the Sanjān settlement. At Cambay, Pársis were settled perhaps about A.D. 990 (No Government Selection New Series XXVf.), certainly by A.D. 1100 (Elliot, II. 16). The Cambay Pársis must have had relations with the Panjáb Pársis, as in A.D. 13 they had copies of the Vandidád which some time between A.D. 1181 and A.D. 13 Herbad Máhyar had brought from Yezd (Sáistán) in Persia to Uechna or 'Ueh in Panjáb (Westergaard's Zend Avesta, I. 8, 11).

² Compare Jour. B. B. R. A. Soc. VI. 120 and Ind. Ant. III. 421. Details of the writings are given in the account of the Kanheri caves in the Thána Gazetteer, XI. 146, 187 and note 1.

³ Prairies d'Or, IV. 86.

⁴ Misnar-bín-Mulhalbil, Elliot's History, I. 97.

⁵ See the history of Siddharāj in Anahilavāda (A.D. 1093-1143) in Elliot, II. 164.

⁶ The name of the village was by Pársi settlers changed from Nágmanul Snakeland to Navsári or New Sári, called after a town in Persia. But Navsári is known by that name at least 500 years before the Pársis settled there. See Bert Ptolemy (A.D. 150). In A.D. 1411 there were twenty-six Pársi houses in Balahr. Pt Prakash, I. 4.

⁷ Westergaard's Zend Avesta, I. 13. There are no remains at Ankleshwar older than A.D. 1600.

⁸ Pársi Prakash, I. 4.

⁹ According to one account the Variáv settlement was as old as the settlement Sanjān. (Lord (1620) in Churehill's Voyages, VI. 329.) These settlers enraged Rajput chief of Ratanpur by refusing to pay tribute and defeating a body of troops sent to enforce this order. When a fresh force arrived from Ratanpur the Pársis were absent at a feast outside the limits of Variáv but the women donned the armour of their husbands and relations and opposed the troops valiantly. When about to obtain a victory, the helmet of one of the female-warriors dropped and exposed her dishonoured hair. On this the Ratanpur troops rallied and made a desperate assault, and the women preferring death to dishonour heroically leapt into the Tā which runs through the village of Variáv and drowned themselves. The day of the disaster (the 25th day of the first month Farvardin) is still commemorated at Sur by special religious ceremonies. The year is unknown.

traced, but in the twelfth century Idrisi (A.D. 1153) speaks of its people as rich, warlike, hardworking, and clever.¹

After the Pársis had been settled nearly 600 years² in Sanján their Rajput overlord was attacked by the Musalmáns under Alp Khán, the general of Muhammád Sháh or Alá-ud-din Khilji (A.D. 1295-1315).³ According to the poetic account in answer to their chief's appeal for help, fourteen hundred mail-clad Pársi horsemen under the leadership of one Ardeskir changed the fortune of the first fight and drove back the Musalmán army. Next day the fight was renewed and Alp Khán prevailed. Ardeskir was slain, and the Pársis were driven from Sanján. Those who escaped fled, taking their sacred fire to the Bhárut hills about eight miles east of Sanján. For twelve years the Pársis remained in hiding, preserving the fire, but apparently giving up most of their peculiar customs.⁴ At last, probably when in the latter part of the century Muhammadan power declined, they left their hiding place in the hills and came to Bánsda bringing the sacred fire. The people of Bánsda received them kindly and led them into the city with much respect. Under the weak and tolerant rule of the later Musalmán governors the Pársis again prospered, and from every clime the descendants of Zoroaster came with abundance of wealth to worship the sacred fire of Behráw. Bánsda was not less prosperous than Sanján had been. Then a Dáwar or religious layman named Changa Ása arose, who showed righteousness and wrought miracles. He renewed and spread the true faith and if any Pársi had not a sacred shirt and girdle Ása paid for their cost and arranged the affairs of the faith. According to the Kissáh-i-Sanján this Dáwar flourished fourteen years after the sacred fire had been brought to Bánsda or about twenty-six years after the fall of Sanján. But nearly a hundred years must have passed,

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.

*Fall of Sanján, and Flight of the Pársis,
A.D. 1315.*

¹ Jaubert's Idrisi, 172. As the Arab travellers speak of the people of Western India as 'infidels' it is seldom possible to say whether they were Hindus or Pársis. The statement in Ibn Haukal (A.D. 950) that between Cambay and Choul the Moslems and the infidels wore the same dress and let their beards grow in the same fashion seems to apply to Pársis not to Hindus. Elliot's History, I. 39.

² The Kissáh-i-Sanján in one passage mentions 500 years and in another 700 years, B. B. R. A. S. Jour. I. 182. Anquetil du Perron (Zend Avesta, I. cccxx.-2) notices that one authority gives from 500 to 580 years.

³ Dr. J. Wilson (J. B. R. A. Soc. I. 182) has suggested that the Máhmud Sháh of the Kissáh-i-Sanján was Máhmud Begada, who reigned in Gujarát from A.D. 1459 to 1513. The mention of Chámpánar as his capital makes it probable that the writer of the Kissáh-i-Sanján thought the Musalmán prince was the well known Máhmud Begada. But the completeness of Alp Khán's conquest of Gujarát leaves little doubt that Sanján fell to his arms. The conqueror might possibly, though much less likely, be Muhammad Sháh Tughlik, who reconquered Gujarát and the Tháwa coast in A.D. 1348. It cannot be Máhmud Begada, as authorities agree that after long wanderings the Sanján fire was brought to Navárá early in the fifteenth century (A.D. 1419). Alp Khán may be Ulugh Khán brother to Alá-ud-din who is sometimes by mistake called Alp Khán, or he may be Alp Khán brother-in-law to Alá-ud-din. Ulugh Khán conquered Gujarát in A.D. 1295-1297 and Alp Khán governed Gujarát in A.D. 1300-1320. The Alp Khán of the text was probably Ulugh Khán (Elliot, III. 167, 163). Neither Farishtah nor the Ferozsháhi has any reference to Pársis. But Amir Khusrú's (A.D. 1300) phrase "The shores of the Gujarát sea were filled with the blood of the Gabres" (Elliot, III. 519) almost certainly refers to or at least includes Pársis, as he notices in another passage (Elliot, III. 516) that among those who had become subject to Islam were the Maghs who delighted in the worship of fire.

⁴ In this time of depression according to Wilford some Pársis became Hindus and others joined the class of Musalmán Navalots. As. Res. IX. 110.

Section I.
Pársis.
EARLY
HISTORY.
*Changä A'sa's
Religious Zeal.*

for it was this Dáwar who in A.D. 1419¹ built a magnificent fire temple at Navsári and had the sacred fire brought from Bánsda with great pomp by three Sanján high priests, Nágan Rám, Khorshed Kámdin, and Chaya Sáhiar.² This great increase of Pársi power in south Gujarát was perhaps owing to an influx of Pársis from the northern cities of Gujarát caused by the very keen Musalmán spirit brought into the government of the country by Muzaffar Khán (A.D. 1391-1403) and his grandson Sultán Ahmad (A.D. 1413-1443). At the same time the sudden increase in numbers and religious zeal seem to point to the arrival of Zoroastrian refugees from the rigour of Timur's rule in Persia (A.D. 1386-1405)³ and Upper India.⁴ According to Ogilby⁵ (A.D. 1670) in the beginning of the fifteenth century many strangers from Persia landed in Gujarát and settling quietly along the coast made known to the Gujarát Pársis their forgotten descent, instructed them in their religion, and taught them to serve God. Further it would seem from the mention of the Dáwar's miracles, of his supplying sacred shirts and girdles, and of his not only renewing and confirming but also extending and advancing the faith,⁶ that part of the increase in the strength of ¹ The date 1403 Mahareshpand Maha Sheherevar of Savrat 1475, that is 26th June 1410, is generally accepted. Against the correctness of this date it is urged that Changä A'sa, who is supposed to have persuaded the priests to move the fire to Navsári, is referred to as the head of the community in the Ravdyets dated A.D. 1478 and 1611, and that the name Khorshed Kámdin, who is said to have been one of the Sanján priests who brought the fire to Navsári, appears in a Ravdyet dated A.D. 1511. But the poetic account does not name the layman who persuaded the priests to move the fire to Sinjlu, and there may have been more than one priest of the name of Khorshed Kámdin.

² It is remarkable that two of these three names are Hindu. Similarly Khosru mentions a Gabri chief named Sataldev, who in spite of his Hindu name must have been a fireworshipper as he is likened to the simurgh or griffin on Mount Caucasus. Elliot, III. 78.

³ After the first severities the fireworshippers seem to have been treated with much consideration by their Arab conquerors. In the middle of the tenth century Ibn Haukal wrote there was scarcely a town in Fars without its fire temple, and among the people of Fars the books and customs of the Guebres continued unharmed. The brunt of the early Tartar invasions (A.D. 1253-1300) fell on the Muhammedans. But Gabres and Musalmáns alike contributed to Timur's ghastly pyramid of heads. Malcoim's History of Persia, I. 459-470.

⁴ The fireworshippers of Upper India, some perhaps local converts but others foreigners, seem up to Timur's (A.D. 1398) conquest to have been an important body. In the middle of the tenth century, Al Istakhrí noticed that parts of Hind and Sindh belonged to the Gábres and other parts to Káfirs and idoloturs. (Ouseley's Oriental Geography, 146.) In A.D. 1079 Ibráhim the Ghaznvide attacked a colony of Persian fire worshippers who had long been settled at Dehra perhaps Dehra Dún. In A.D. 1184 Pársis were settled at Uchra, probably Uch in the Panjáb (Westergaard's Zend Avesta, I. 4 in Elliot's History). They would seem to have been in communication with the Cambay Pársis. In A.D. 1323 there was in Cambay a copy of the Váhidá that was brought from Yárd to Uch in A.D. 1181 (Westergaard, I. 3, 11, & 27). At the time of Timur's invasion (A.D. 1398) among the captives there were Magians as well as Hindus, and the people of Tughlikhpur are described as believers in the two principles of good and evil and are said to have acknowledged Yazdán and Ahrtimín. About a hundred years later (1504 A.D.) Bedami mentions that the emperor Sikandar destroyed fire altars and in Abul Fozl's time (A.D. 1690) Gabri is mentioned as a dialect of the Kálmí country. The Gabres of Rohilkhand and the Magyás of Mithra and the Maghs of Tughlikhpur may, in Professor Dowson's opinion, be the relics of the old Upper India Pársis. Wilford (As. Res. IX. 214) held that the infidels of Tughlikhpur were Manichean Christians. But the fuller information that has since become available shows that they were Pársis. Elliot, III. 78, 471-494, 497, 506.

⁵ See Atlas, V. 21-A. Ogilby's account is accurate and detailed.

⁶ B. B. R. A. S. Jour. I. 157-168. The expression 'Every tribe of believers flourished' would seem to imply that some distinction of caste was kept up.

the Pársis was due to the conversion of Hindus.¹ Changa Ása continued the practice, which is known to be at least as old as the beginning of the fourteenth century, of referring doubtful religious questions for the opinion of the learned priests of Persia.² After his death the practice was continued and the replies of the Persian priests have been collected and form a work of authority known as the Raváyets.³ These replies show that there were Pársi settlements in Navsári, Bráñch, Ankleshvar, Cambay, and Surat. It seems also that about the middle of the fifteenth century some Pársis, either from Upper India or from Gujarát, were settled in the north of Gujarát at Chandmuli apparently Chandrávati near Mount Ábu.⁴ In the sixteenth century the Portuguese writer Garcia d'Orta (A.D. 1535) notices a curious class of merchants and shopkeepers who were called Coris that is Gauris in Bassein, and Esparis that is Pársis in Cambay. The Portuguese called them Jews, but they were no Jews, for they were uncircumcised and ate pork. Besides they came from Persia and had a curious written character, strange oaths, and many foolish superstitions, Section I.

PÁRSIS.

EARLY HISTORY.

European Accounts,
A.D. 1500 - 1600.

¹ During their time of prosperity at Sinján (A.D. 700-1300) the Pársis seem to have converted a large section of the Hindu population near Thánu. In A.D. 1323 when Fryer Oderie was in Thánu he found that the rulers were Musalmán and the people idolators, some of them worshipping trees and serpents and some worshipping fire. That the fireworshippers were either Pársis or Hindu converts to the Zoroastrian faith seems beyond doubt, as they did not bury their dead but carried them with great pomp to the fields and ent them to the beasts and birds to be devoured. This he repeats in another passage and notices that the bodies were speedily destroyed by the excessive heat of the sun. Again when he goes to Malabár he notices that the people there burned instead of exposing their dead. (Yule's Cathay, I. 57, 59, 70, and 79.) Jordanus, who was in Thánu several years before Oderie and who as a missionary travelled from Thánu to Morocco, still more clearly describes the Pársis. There he, he says, other pagan folk who worship fire. They bury not their dead, neither do they burn them, but cast them into the midst of a certain roofless tower and there expose them totally uncovered to the fowls of heaven. These believe in two first principles of evil and of good and of darkness and of light. Mirambala, 21.

² Between A.D. 1181 and 1323 one Herbud Mahyár travelled from India from the town of Uechah or Uch on the Indus, stayed six years with the Herbuds of Yazdán or Seistán, was taught by them in the Zoroastrian faith, and returned to India. He brought with him a copy of the Vandhidád which had been made in Yazdán or Seistán in A.D. 1181 by Ardeshir son of Bihman. This is doubtless the origin of the tradition reported by Anquetil du Perron that the copy of the Vandhidád which the Pársis had brought to India on their first arrival was lost at the close of the fourteenth century and that a Dastur Ardeshir who came from Seistán to Gujarát gave the Pársis a copy of the Vandhidád with the Pehlvi translation. From the copy which Mahyár brought, other copies were made in Cambay in A.D. 1323 by Herbuds Kalkhosru and Rustam Meherbin, strangers from Iran (Westergaard's Zand Avesta, I. 3, 11). The oldest copies now extant are the Cambay copies. The original of these and also the copies brought to India before this have apparently been lost. Westergaard says: The Pársis did not trouble themselves with the books on which their faith was based. Had it not been for the communication with Persia in modern times Anquetil would probably not have found a vestige of a book. Zand Avesta, I. 22.

³ Of these Raváyets a compilation was made by Dastur Bírjor Kámdín of Navsári in A.D. 1630, and a complete collection by Dastur Doráb Hormazdiár of Balásh in A.D. 1685. The earliest letter, which is dated the 22nd of August 1178, complains bitterly of the miserable state of the fireworshippers in Persia. Among the points decided were that a dead body should not be carried by bearers who were not Zoroastrians; that the bier should be of iron not of wood; and that women when ceremonially unclean should wear gloves. Another is dated the 17th of January 1511 and another the 17th of January 1535. In the last they approve of building Towers of Silence of stone instead of brick. Several of these letters are given in full in the Páral Prákash, I. 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13.

⁴ Sir A. Barnes' MS. Account of Ábu of 6th March 1828.

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.

Emperor
Akbar converted to the Pársi Faith,
A.D. 1578.

taking their dead out by a special door and exposing their bodies till they were destroyed.¹ Though very few traces of their missionary efforts remain, the Pársis seem, even as late as the close of the sixteenth century, to have been anxious to make converts.² In A.D. 1578, at the request of the emperor Akbar, they sent learned priests both from Navsári and from Kirmán in Persia to explain the Zoroastrian faith.³ They found Akbar a ready listener and a willing believer and taught him their peculiar terms, ordinances, rites, and ceremonies. Akbar issued orders that the sacred fire should be made over to the charge of Abul Fazl, and that after the manner of the kings of Persia in whose temples blazed perpetual fires Fazl should take care that the sacred fire was never allowed to go out either by night or by day, for that it was one of the signs of God and one light from among the many lights of his creation.⁴ Akbar, according to Portuguese accounts, was invested with the sacred shirt and girdle, and in return granted the Gujarát priest Meherji Rána an estate at Gheikhari near Navsári, and his descendants have since (A.D. 1580-1838) been the chief priests at Navsári. At the close of the century Abul Fazl (A.D. 1590) in his account of Surat notices the followers of Zerdusht who practised the doctrine of the Zend and Pazeud and made use of sepulchres.⁵ Early in the seventeenth century (A.D. 1616) the Pársis of Surat are described as dressing like other people except that they did not shave the head and that the men allowed the beard to grow long. They were a hardworking people, living by all kinds of husbandry, sowing and setting herbs, planting vines and palm and other fruit trees.⁶ The rivalry between the different European trading companies was a great gain to the Pársis. As early as A.D. 1620 a Pársi was the leading native servant of the English Company, knowing already 'a mediocrity of the English tongue.'⁷ The Pársis attracted the notice of Mr. Lord, an English chaplain, who in A.D. 1620 drew up the first European account of their history and religion. A few years later (A.D. 1626) Sir Thomas Herbert also wrote a sketch of their history and religion. He notices that on board of the ship that took him from Surat to Gombroon in the Persian Gulf there were 600 slaves Pársis Gentoos Bauians and others.⁸ In A.D. 1638 Mandelslo describes the Surat Pársis as not particularly tall but fairer than other natives and the women much prettier. The men wore the beard full and round and either wore the hair long or shaved the head except the topknot. Except that they wore a girdle of wool or camel's hair, both men and women dressed in the

¹ Colloquios dos Simples, 213. Supplied by Dr. Gerson da Cunha. ² Elliot, V. 528.

³ In A.D. 1597, after his return to Persia, the Kirmán priest Ardeshr Nosherván wrote to Dastur Kámdin Padam of Broach: "I wrote you a letter five and a half months ago but have received no reply. On leaving Dehli I came to Multán and there met Behdin Káus Mahliar, who gave me all your news. If Káus had met me at Labor, I would have accepted your invitation and come to Broach. As Káus told me that you are anxious to visit Persia, I feel satisfied that we shall meet. If you come and visit Persia, your name will never be forgotten in Hindustán. If you come with Káus, have no fear of the road." This letter is embodied in the Ravdyets (Pársi Prakásh, I. 10).

⁴ Elliot's History, V. 530. Akbar adopted the Pársi feasts and had a fire temple in his harém or private apartment. Ditto, 210, 276. According to the Pársi account Akbar was invested with the sacred shirt and girdle. Dabistán, III. 93-96.

⁵ Gladwin's Ain-i-Akbárí, II. 65.

⁶ Lord (1620) in Churchill's Voyages, VI. 328.

⁷ Herbert's Travels, 56-59 and 107.

⁸ Terry's Travels, 337.

same way as other people. Their houses were small, dark and badly furnished. They seldom ate animal food, though, except that of the ox cow elephant camel and hare, flesh was not forbidden them. They drank liquor but not to excess. They lived by growing tobacco, drawing palm-juice, banking trading shopkeeping, and the practice of crafts except smith's work and other callings in which fire is used. They were better tempered than the Musalmáns, but they were the greediest basiest people in the world, using all their skill to cheat in trade though they objected to other forms of robbery. They were found all along the coast and were allowed by the Musalmáns to settle their own disputes.¹ Pársis seem, but the meaning of the passage is rather doubtful, to have been settled in large numbers in the Konkan, as Mandelslo says that in the Bijápur territories craftsmen work for Musalmáns Hindus and Pársis who are there in greater number than either Dakhanis or Kanarins.² In A.D. 1680 Thevenot notices that they are called Guabres and Ateshperešt.³ A few years later Ogilby (A.D. 1670) summed up the available information regarding the Pársis. According to him they came about A.D. 640 in a fleet of seven ships, some said as many as 18,000 men women and children. The people from five of the ships settled at Sanján, those from another at Variáv near Surat, and those from the seventh at Cambay. Afterwards they forgot their origin their religion and even their name. At length the name of Persians was made known to them by some men from Persia who instructed them in their religion and taught them to serve God. After this many Persians came and settled along the sea coast and lived quietly among the natives. Their bodies were about the middle size. Their faces pale and generally fairer than the faces of Europeans, especially the women who excelled all other women of the country in beauty. The men who were generally hooknosed wore great round beards and on their heads either long black hair or short hair with a lock on the crown. They dwelt in dark houses meanly furnished in a ward by themselves. They did not eat cows or pigs. Except the sash they dressed like Hindus. They were very ingenious and for the most part maintained themselves with tilling, buying and selling fruit, tapping palm trees, and keeping taverns. Some traded and others practised all crafts but smith's work. A few were servants, but those were accounted unclean and unbelievers. Most of them were covetous and hard, very deceitful in their dealings, no way inclined to whoring or theft, and meek and compassionate in their conversation. Their chief fire temple was at Navsári, where they had kept the fire burning for about 250 years.⁴ According to Fryer (A.D. 1674) the Pársis were found south of the Tápti about forty miles along the coast and about twenty miles inland. They had fled from Persia and been made free denizens by the Indians before the Moors were masters. They were somewhat whiter and he thought nastier than the Gentos. The whole family lived together and respected the eldest brother if the father was dead. They ate fish and flesh and drank wine. They were husbandmen rather than merchants,

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.

European Accounts,
A.D. 1600 - 1700.

¹ Mandelslo's Travels, 1673 Harris, II. 124-125.

² Voyages, 222. Mandelslo probably meant Khorásani Musalmáns.

³ Voyages, V. 46. ⁴ Ogilby's Atlas, V. 218, 219.

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.European Accounts,
A.D. 1600 - 1700.

not caring to go abroad. They supplied the marine with carts drawn by oxen and the ships with wood and water. They worshipped the sun and had a fire temple at Navsári, and exposed their dead in round tombs that the vultures and ravenous fowls might entomb them.¹

Ovington a few years later (A.D. 1690) calls the Pársis a very considerable sect. Their tradition was that they had come to Ind'ia fleeing from Muhammad and that they were saved from being wrecked by the crowing of a cock. They worshipped fire, and, if their houses were on fire, would be persuaded to pour oil to increase rather than water to assuage the flame. A Pársi servant who is commanded to bring a hot steel and warm with it a bowl of punch will plead his excuse, and that he dare not hasten the coolness of the steel by a violent abatement of the heat. At their solemn festivals they went, a hundred or two together, to the suburbs, each bringing his victuals and distributing them equally. They were hardworking and diligent, careful to train their children to arts and labour. They were the chief men of the loom in all the country.² They showed a firm affection to all of their own sentiments in religion, helping the poor and providing for the needy. They left no man destitute, and did not suffer a beggar in all their tribe. After about another twenty years (A.D. 1710) they are described as good carpenters and shipbuilders,³ exquisite weavers and embroiderers. They made silks, especially the fine Broach and Navsári silks called bástás, worked in ivory and agate, and distilled strong waters.⁴

Religious
Disputes.

Though strangers gave the Pársis so high a character for kindness and for the orderly management of the affairs of their community, serious troubles were not unknown. At Navsári between the two bodies of priests, the original priests and those who had come from Sanján, a longstanding rivalry prevailed regarding the right to perform certain ceremonies. Some disaffected members of the original Navsári priesthood increased the ill-feeling and aided the Sanján priests. In A.D. 1685 the dispute passed into a fight, in which the Navsári section killed six laymen who had taken the side of the Sanján priests. For this outrage twelve of the Navsári priests were taken to Surat and imprisoned. Meanwhile the Navsári laymen began to employ the Sanján section as their household priests. As the Sanján priests had till then served only in the temple, this led to a fresh disturbance, and in A.D. 1733 the Sanján priests, taking their fire with them, went to Surat. After three years

¹ Fryer's New Account of East India and Persia, 117. Fryer gives a deplorable account of the state and customs of the Persian Pársis or Quabers. Ibid., 265-266.

² Ovington's Voyage, 370-375.

³ The United East India Company's dock, started about 300 years ago at Surat, was managed by Pársi carpenters. In A.D. 1735 a ship named The Queen was built in the Surat dockyard by Pársi carpenters. Mr. Dudley who was then Master Attendant of Bombay went to Surat to see The Queen. He brought back with him to Bombay a Pársi named Lauji Nasarvanji Vadia, who was foreman in the Surat dockyard, and under Lauji's superintendence built the Bombay dockyard. Lauji was the first Pársi Master Builder in Bombay, and the post remained till A.D. 1881 with the Vadia family. Under the charge of this distinguished family 335 ships were built.

⁴ Hamilton's New Account, I. 161. Of their origin Hamilton's version is that in the seventh century 400 to 500 families came by sea from Jasques in the Persian gulf and after twenty days landed in the river of Navsári.

they came back to Navsári. But party feeling was so strong that they could not remain. In A.D. 1741 the Sanjân faction asked the Marátha governor to let them retire to Balsár. They stayed in Balsár for a year and then on the 28th of October 1742 moved to Udváda, where the original Sanjân fire has since remained.¹ Besides these struggles among the priests several religious disputes raged at this time. Two of these were whether the legs of a corpse should be stretched or folded, and whether the face should or should not be covered with a cloth. These disputes have not yet been settled; the factions into which the community was then divided still (A.D. 1838) exist. The third dispute² as

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.Religious
Disputes,
A.D. 1700-1750.

¹ Parsi Prakash, I. 35; Ind. Ant. I. 213. Du Perron gives A.D. 1751; Zond Avesta, I. cccxxv.

² The dispute as to the reckoning of the year is generally said to have begun with the teaching of the Persian priest Jamasp who about A.D. 1720 did so much to increase the Parsis' knowledge of their sacred books (Westergaard's Zend Avesta, 5). Contemporary accounts show that the agitation which split the community into two sects did not arise till A.D. 1736, when a Zoroastrian layman or b-hedin named Jamshed arrived in Gujurát from Persia. Jamshed seems to have brought to the notice of the Surat Parsis that their reckoning of months was one month behind the reckoning of the Persian Zoroastrians. The dispute lasted for several years. It ended on the 6th of June 1746 by the community splitting into two sects, Shenshalis who kept to the Indian reckoning and Kadmis who adopted the Persian practice. The Parsis both Shenshalis and Kadmis hold that in the time of the Zoroastrian kings in Persia every 120th year was made a year of thirteen months. This addition of a month is called Kabisá or intercalation. The Shenshalis declare that they follow the year as settled at the last Kabisá performed in the hills of Kobistán by the first batch of the Zoroastrians that fled from Muhammadan persecution and are hence one month behind the Kadmis who have not taken note of that Kabisá. And as they thus claim their year to have been settled according to the old royal practice of Kabisá, they style themselves Shenshalis meaning royal, while the other section styles itself Kadmis, meaning ancient, as it claims that its practice is most ancient and aver that the Kabisá used to be performed for and affected only the revenue year of Persia and had nothing to do with the year as reckoned for the purposes of religious rites and ceremonies. In A.D. 1769 the leading Kadmi laymen of Surat sent to Persia a learned Branch priest named Káus. Káus took with him his son Peshotan, afterwards the well-known Mulla Feroz. The father and son stayed in Persia for twelve years and returned to Bombay with a great name for learning. They became the champions of the Kadmis. Under the supervision of Káus, who is better known as Mulla Káus, a Kadmi fire-temple or *Atesh Behrá*m was established in Bombay on the 29th of September 1783. This is the oldest fire-temple in Bombay. Mulla Káus became the first Kadmi Dástur or high priest. He was succeeded on the 26th of February 1802 by his son the famous Mulla Feroz. The high priesthood of the Kadmis remained till A.D. 1897 in the family of Mulla Feroz. In A.D. 1783 at Branch the rivalry between the two sects was so keen that it led to the murder of a Kadmi lady of influence. Some of the leading members of the Branch Shenshalis sect were brought to Bombay for trial. One of them named Homáji was convicted of murder (31st July 1783) and hanged; the rest were acquitted. In A.D. 1826-27 under the influence of Mulla Feroz some Shenshalis families joined the Kadmi sect. This caused much ill-feeling. But the rivalry gradually died out and has never since been revived. At present (A.D. 1898) there is the fullest harmony between the two sects. Formerly intermarriage was shunned; it is now common. Conversions from one sect to the other are unknown. Differences of liturgy of pronouncing certain words and of reckoning the year are not now considered important.

Regarding the reckoning of the year, which was the main cause of division, it may be noticed that the reckoning of neither sect is correct. Though the year adopted by both sects is a solar year, it does not correspond correctly with the movements of the sun. In Persia the error remained uncorrected till about A.D. 1076. Jalál-ud-din Malik Sháh (A.D. 1074-1092), king of Persia, ordered that a day should be added to the year whenever it was necessary in order to make the new year fall on the day the sun passed the same point of the ecliptic. He appointed Umar Cheyam, an astronomer, to make a calendar. The corrected year is called the Maliksháhi year, and this is still the Persian revenue year. The names of the months and the days of the Maliksháhi year are the same as

Section I.

Pársis.

EARLY HISTORY.Religious Disputes.

A.D. 1700-1800.

to the proper reckoning of the year ended in the division of the Pársis into Shenshabis and Kadmis. Though the community was torn by these disputes, in the beginning of the eighteenth century there was a notable advance in the Pársi knowledge of their sacred books and languages. This was due to the efforts of a Persian priest named Jamasp who visited Gujarát about A.D. 1720. He left an accurate copy of a Zend-Pehlevi Vendidad and established small centres of Zend and Pehlevi scholarship in Surat Navsári and Broach.¹

those of the Shenshabi and Kadmi years. In all of them the year begins with the day of Hormazd and the month of Fervardin. In the Malikshahi years the day of Hormazd always falls on the 21st March. In the Kadmi and Shenshabi years it falls on varying dates in August and September.

¹ Westergaard's Zend Avesta, I. 5. Jamasp also presented the Surat Pársis with the Fervardin Yashat and with a branch of the true hom Asclepias acida tree. This tree grows only in Persia. Several attempts have been made in years past to grow the tree in India but without success. Dried branches of the hom tree imported from Persia are used by Pársi priests in their religious ceremonies.

SECTION II.—SETTLEMENTS.

THE Pársis had begun to settle in Bombay under the Portuguese (A.D. 1530-1666). One of them, Dorábji Nánábhái, the founder of the Patel family, held a high place in the island before its transfer to the British (A.D. 1666), and before the close of the seventeenth century several more families, of whom the Modis, Pandes, Banájis, Dádisehts, and Vádiás were among the earliest settled in the island.¹ In the eighteenth century the movement greatly increased. To the Gujarát Pársis, more than to any class of native traders, was due the development of the trade of Bombay, especially of its great trade connection with China.² Early in the eighteenth century Gujarát Pársis were also spread along the Malabár Coast for purposes of trade. In Madras in A.D. 1780 Pársis were influential merchants and in A.D. 1790 built a Tower of Silence which owing to some ill omen has never been brought into use.³ Though many Pársis came to Bombay, almost all continued to consider Surat or Navsári their home, and during the second half of the eighteenth century after its transfer to the British (A.D. 1753) the Surat Pársis rose greatly in wealth and position. In A.D. 1764 Niebuhr found them a gentle quiet and industrious race, beloved by the Hindus, multiplying greatly, and engaged in all trades and callings. They were skilful merchants, hardworking craftsmen, and good servants. They made common contributions for the aid of their poor, and suffered none of their number to ask alms from people of a different religion.⁴ In A.D. 1774 according to the Dutch traveller Stavorinus there were about 100,000 Pársis in and round Surat. There were no beggars among them, and they much surpassed all the other people in industry. Many were servants to Europeans. They increased in number

Section II.

Pársis.

SETTLEMENTS,
A.D. 1600-1800.

¹ Mr. Bamanji Belramji Patel.

² The first modern Pársi who visited China was Hirji Jivanji Readymoney who went there in A.D. 1756. Pársi Prakash, I. 41.

³ The Pársis attach great importance to the first body which is laid in a new Tower of Silence. They have an almost insuperable objection to use a new Tower of Silence to receive the corpse of a young person. If the first inmate is a youth many deaths will follow among the young of the community. To receive into a new tower the corpse of an old person is considered proper, because to the aged death has lost its horror. Next to an aged body it is best to open a tower to receive the corpse of an infant, because the loss of an infant is not so keenly felt as the loss of a child. The Madras Tower of Silence remained unused because for several years no desirable deaths took place. (Pársi Prakash, I. 881.) As regards children a further belief prevails that the mother of the child whose body is first laid in the Tower of Silence remains barren ever after. In May 1853 an illustration of this belief was furnished in the case of a Tower of Silence at Amroli near Surat. To escape the evil omen the people of Amroli bribed the corpse-bearers to stealthily bring a child's body from Surat and place it in the Amroli tower. The parents of the child complained to the Enecliyat at Surat and the corpse-bearers were punished.

⁴ Pinkerton, X. 216-220.

Section II.

Pársis.

SETTLEMENTS,
A.D. 1700-1800.

from day to day and inhabited many entire wards.¹ Some leaving their wives behind them went to Cochin² but they were despised. Several were rich and might be counted among the chief merchants of Surat. Their leading men were the English Portuguese and Dutch brokers.³

¹ Several of the wards or purnis in Surat are named after Pársis; Rústampur is named after Rustam Manek a leading English broker about A.D. 1630; Nánampur is named after Nánabhoi Narsangji Patel a wealthy landlord; and Mancherpara is named after Maneberji Kharadji Seth a well-known Dutch broker and merchant between A.D. 1719 and A.D. 1734.

² A Pársi named Kávarji Edniji held an excise farm in Cochin in A.D. 1796 paying Rs. 400 a month to Government. Pársi Prakash, I. 880.

³ At Surat in the middle of the seventeenth century a Pársi named Rustam, the son of a priest named Mánék, held a high position as the United East India Company's broker. An account dated A.D. 1711 (Yezdezard 1080) written in Persian verse by a priest named Jamshed Kokobad records that in A.D. 1660 Rustam went with the European head of the Surat factory to Delhi to ask the emperor Aurangzeb to remove the difficulties under which the Company suffered. Jamshed makes Rustam address the emperor in the following Persian verse:

Ko in mard az beharé Sodágarí
Ba Hind A'madast az ráhe Kháirí.
Yali dakhal na dehod indá bi Shéher
Amránd darghós bálá ba melér.
Hami merde Angrij niko társat
Pur timido zele shabi bar társat.
Gózarad chavun arz kaz lotafé shah.
Dehod Jásah der shéheré Surat panah.
Ko kare tojarat darán árádash
Hom amháir ítháné barán dáradasht.

This European gentleman has come from his country to India to trade. The nobles of your most gracious court do not allow him to enter the city. This English gentleman is highly honourable and is most anxious to be under the royal shadow. He prays that by the grace of your majesty he may be given a place and protection in Surat, that he may begin his business of trade and have also stores and houses.

According to the account the emperor through his vazir Asadkhán replied: That the English should be given places for houses and stores in the city of Surat; that they might build houses in it; that they should receive no harm and be subjected to no prohibitions; that no taxes should be levied on their trade. Pársi Prakash, I. 15.

Bruce (Annals of the East India Company, III. 595) has the following reference to this Rustam. While Sir Nicholas Witte was President at Surat, Rustam, whom from his first arrival he had employed as broker, continued from interested motives attached to his views. After Sir Nicholas Witte assumed the office of General at Bombay this cautious native, discovering that his object was to make that island the centre of trade, explained to Mr. Bonneland Mr. Proby, the English Company's servants at Surat, that Sir Nicholas Witte promised to give him fifty thousand rupees to use his influence with the governor of Surat to keep Sir John Gayer confined which sum was to be paid to him by advances on the prices of the Company's goods. When Sir Nicholas Witte was informed of this conduct of Rustam he dismissed him from the English Company's employment notwithstanding that the united trade was then indebted to him 1,40,000 rupees and the separate companies 5,50,000 rupees. Soon after Rustam's death on 30th July 1721 disputes arose in settling the accounts between the East India Company and Rustam's three sons Framji, Bomanji, and Nowroji. The officers of the East India Company at Surat arranged that the eldest son Framji should be kept in custody by the Surat Nawáb and that the second son Bomanji should be confined to his house at Bombay. The third brother Nowroji went to England to lay his grievances before the Court of Directors. He reached England about the end of April 1723. He and his Pársi servant were the first Pársis, perhaps the first natives, of India who went to England. Nowroji was so successful in England that in a despatch dated London the 19th of August 1724 the Court of Directors ordered that his two brothers should be set free and the dispute settled by friendly agreement. In January 1721 arbitrators decided that the East India Company should pay the brothers £54,640 (Rs. 5,40,400) in three yearly instalments. Nowroji made a good impression in England. "Everybody here" writes Mr. Bonneland chief of Surat, 25th March 1725, "bath great value and esteem for him." When he left for India the Court presented him with a dress of honour and a portrait of himself which his family still (A.D. 1895) possesses. On his return to

The Musalman governor of Surat feared their superior courage and let them live in their part of the city very much as they liked.¹ Several Parsis enjoyed honour and influence at the court of Delhi and some of them received grants of land and other marks of distinction.² Shortly after this, owing to the great development of the opium and cotton trade with China, the Parsis rose greatly in wealth both at Surat and Bombay. In A.D. 1783 Forbes noticed that in Surat of late years the most beautiful villas and gardens, at least those in the best order, no longer belonged to Moghals or Hindus but to Parsis. They were active, robust, prudent, and persevering and formed a very valuable part of the Company's subjects on the western shores of Hindustan where they were highly esteemed and encouraged. They never interfered with the Government or police but gradually and silently made money. They not only grew rich but knew how to enjoy the comforts and luxuries which money can bring. In their domestic economy and still more in their entertainments to their English friends in Section II. Parsis.

SETTLEMENTS,
A.D. 1700-1800.

India Nowroji settled in Bombay. Between A.D. 1725 and 1730 he bought the hill at Mazgaon now known as Nowroji Hill. It did not then yield more than Rs. 300 a year. But its quarries have since made his family one of the richest in Bombay. The family is known as the Seth Khāndān. Parsi Prakash, I. 26. In A.D. 1781 a Surat Parsi named Manir visited England as assistant to Hanmantray who is described as a high caste Brahman, the agent of Raghunāthrao Peshwa. They found many difficulties and endured many hardships till Burke took them to Berconfield and gave them a large green-house in which they might keep all the rules of their caste and religion. Burke's Life, III. 46.

¹ Stravins' Voyages, II. 402, 497, 503; III. 1, 2.

² Of the Parsis who visited the Moghal court the names of eight remain. The first was Metherji Rāna who (see above page 194) invested Akbar with the sacred shirt and girdle in A.D. 1550 and in reward became high priest of Navastri. The second was Metherji's son Kekolā who about A.D. 1591-95 went to Delhi to seek redress of the Nawāb of Surat had tried to take away the emperor's grant of 200 acres. Kekolā was successful and in a paper dated the tenth of Ashwād in the fourth year of Akbar's reign he received an additional grant of a hundred acres. The third was Mulla Jāmtes a priest of Navastri who about A.D. 1610 in return for a present of jūmā oil was given a piece of land named Kātāziri near Navastri by the emperor Jahangir. The fourth was Rustam Mānck who went with the head of the Surat factory to Delhi in 1650. The fifth was Sorābjī Kāvāsji who was of great service to the English in 1760 when they obtained command of the Surat castle and the post of Moghal Admiral. He returned to Surat bringing dresses of honour and a horse to the heads of the English Company at Surat (Dispatch from the Surat Chief in Council to the Bombay President and Council 3rd May 1760 in Briggs' Cities of Gujarat-etc.). It is said that Sorābjī Kāvāsji, who had been taught watchmaking by a European, first went to Delhi in 1715 to mend a favourite clock of the emperor. The emperor, probably Muḥammad Shāh (A.D. 1719-1748), was so pleased with Sorābjī's skill that he honoured him with the title of Nek Sātkhān that is Lord of the Lucky Hour, gave him a lien on the customs revenue in Surat and the rank of a chief of 500 horse and 300 foot. Nek Sātkhān was an ancestor of the well known Ardeshir Bākhsh Kotwal of Surat. The sixth was Kāvāsji Rustamji, third son of the high priest of Udvāh, who is said to have gone to Delhi as Nek Sātkhān's assistant. He was given the title of Mirzā Khosrū Beg and land near Furrat which his family, now known as the Mirzā family, enjoyed for several years. Mirzā Khosrū Beg's skill as a watchmaker descended to his son Kaloji who was watch-repairer to Bājirāy Peshwa. After Bājirāy's fall (A.D. 1818) Kaloji went to Bhāvnagar with a clock of Bājirāy's which the Bhāvnagar chief had bought. In Bhāvnagar he made entirely from local materials a large clock for which a tower was built and which is still (A.D. 1896) in order. Kaloji's descendants have a high name in Bhāvnagar and in Kāthiāwār generally for their skill as watchmakers and mechanics. The seventh was Kalābhr Sorābjī the son-in-law of Nek Sātkhān. He is said to have gone to Delhi to meet his father-in-law and received an estate in Rānder in Surat. The eighth was Metherji Kharāhedji Seth, a wealthy merchant and well known Dutch broker who some time before A.D. 1781 visited Delhi, it was said at the emperor's request, who had heard of the liberality for which he was famous.

Section II.

- Pársis.

SETTLEMENTS.

*A Pársi
Martyr.Pársi Prosperity,
A.D. 1800.*

Bombay and Surat Asiatic splendour was agreeably blended with European taste and comfort. They were subject to little priestly influence and liable to few restrictions in food, fasting, purifications, and religious mortifications. They knew how to appreciate and enjoy the blessings by which they were surrounded.¹

Early in the eighteenth century a Broach Pársi named Kámáji Homáji, a weaver, was convicted of having called a Musalmán a kúfir or infidel. Ahmad Beg, the Nawáb of Broach, gave Kámáji the choice of embracing Islám or of being slain by the sword. Kámáji refused to change his faith and was killed. The Broach Pársis still recite his name with other notables in all public religious ceremonies.² In A.D. 1857 there was a riot between the Pársis and Musalmáns of Broach.³

During the early part of the nineteenth century the Pársis continued to prosper. In the general depression of A.D. 1825 in Surat the Pársis alone were well-to-do without a beggar among them, thriving where even a Bohora could glean only a scanty maintenance.⁴ Besides as wealthy merchants Pársis rose to high posts under the East India Company and in native states. The eighteenth and the early years of the nineteenth century were the times of the greatest prosperity of Gujarát especially of Surat Pársis.⁵ After the great fire of Surat in A.D. 1837 Bombay became the head-quarters.

¹ Oriental Memoirs, III. 411, 412.

² Pársi Prakash, I. 22.

³ On the 18th of May 1857 Broach became the scene of a serious riot between Moslems and Pársis. The Mahomedans of Broach, whose numbers were largely increased by the Bohorás of surrounding villages, were excited by the report which two Pársis Jivraj Peshwaji Kamalkhan and Kurbád Kavasji Popti, enemies of Bezoni, Sherfáji, known generally as Bezon Gándá or The Mad, had spread that Bezoni had desecrated the mosques of the Mahomedans. Dastur Ardeshir Hormasji Kamdin, an aged priest of ninety years, who was in charge of one of the fire-temples, was killed. Several other Pársis were wounded and much property destroyed. Bezon Gándá also was killed with cruelty. The military had to be called to suppress the riot. Between the following August and November the rioters were tried, two were hanged for the murder of Dastur Ardeshir and Bezon Gándá, eleven, among whom were the two Pársi instigators, were condemned to transportation for life, one to penal servitude for ten years, and twenty-five others to smaller terms of imprisonment.

⁴ Heber's Narrative, II. 175. There must have been considerable wealth among the Surat Pársis in A.D. 1823 as in that year two fire temples were built. Briggs' Cities of Gujarát, 117.

⁵ In the beginning of the nineteenth century Kharsedji Jamshedji Modi, a Pársi of Cambay, rose to great influence in the Peshwa's court at Poona. In the British service he rose to the post of native agent to Colonel Close, the Resident at Poona in 1809. In A.D. 1810 Bádjáy Peshwa appointed him Sir Subhedar of the Karnátak. He was allowed to hold both appointments till A.D. 1818 when he gave up the Peshwa's service. In A.D. 1814 Mr. Elphinstone, the British Resident, suspecting him of advising the Peshwa against the British, rewarded him for his past services but required him to retire to Gujarát. As he was about to leave Poona he died of poison whether taken by himself or given by the Peshwa is unknown. Modi's descendants enjoy land in Rálej in Cambay which was given to him by the Peshwa and confirmed to his descendants by the British. Dhanjishá, son of Harjorji Beheromankhán and grandson of Nek Satkhán, early in the nineteenth century held the post of Native Agent under the East India Company for the states of Sachin, Bárná, Mándvi, and Dharampor. In A.D. 1810 when a Muhammadan fanatic calling himself Abdul Rehman raised a revolt in Mándvi, Dhanjishá went with the force that was sent to suppress the outbreak. He was among the first to cross the river, and endeavoured to prevail on the saik to surrender himself, but along with the Rájá's agent and some others he was killed in the attempt. In recognition of Dhanjishá's services his widow was given a yearly pension of Rs. 3000. Pherozshá, of the Pársis¹ and since then has had as permanent settlers the largest and richest section of the community.² In Bombay the Pársis have showed themselves most enterprising and successful merchants. The bulk of the native foreign trade was in their hands and the very great liberality of some of the leading Pársis made their name honourable. Between A.D. 1857 and 1863 they secured a large share of the wealth that was poured into Western India by the American war and by the making of railways. In A.D. 1861 and 1865 many lately-made fortunes were lost and some old families were ruined. But most were able to keep a competence and some remain among the richest families in Bombay island. Since A.D. 1865 the Pársis have played a leading part in starting and developing the great factory industry that has sprung up since A.D. 1851.³ Many of the largest and best managed mills belong to Pársis and besides as owners and shareholders large numbers find highly paid employment as mechanical engineers and weaving, carding and spinning masters. Broach ranks next to Bombay in the prosperity of its Pársis. The Pársis of Broach Ankevar and other towns in the Broach district are wealthier than the bulk of other natives of the place. There is hardly a Pársi family that does not own a merchant, a trader, or a contractor. In all Gujarat the Pársis of Broach are remarkable for their enterprise and perseverance as merchants. They deal largely in cotton, timber, fuel, and in the flower of the mou ra Bassia latifolia, and own several cotton gins. They are also to be found in Bháringar as prosperous cotton

Section II.

Pársis.

SETTLEMENTS.

*Parsi Success in Bombay,
A.D. 1790-1898.*

Mahajir's chief son, became Principal Sudar Amin in A.D. 1825 and Native Judge of the Surat court in A.D. 1832 and was appointed Governor's Native Agent for Dharampur, Borsad and Mahesh. In A.D. 1822 Government granted Phororsha the six villages of Pambur, Valsara, Bharsda, Gira, Bhursel, and Rajvali yielding Rs. 12,000 a year. Phororsha's grandfather the village of Vandersala worth Rs. 6000 a year from the Mandai chief and a village named Kotalpur from the Mandai chief. Phororsha's heirs up till recently enjoyed these villages. He died in A.D. 1843 and was honoured by one of the largest talukdars in Surat (Parsi Prakash, I. 117). Ardeshir, Phororsha's second son, rose to be the most prominent man in Surat. As Intendant or head of the police he saved the city from soldiers and pirates, remodelled the police, and according to the common saying enabled the people to sleep with open doors. In A.D. 1829 in reward for his services Sir John Malcolm, then Governor of Bombay (A.D. 1827-1830), presented him with a gold medal, dresses of honour, and four villages worth about Rs. 3000 a year. Ardeshir died in A.D. 1859.

¹ The first great migration from Gujarat to Bombay seems to have taken place in A.D. 1744. In that year owing to a severe famine in Gujarat a large number of Parsi families from the villages round Surat crowded to Bombay where they were received by the local Pársis with sympathy and liberality.

² The following are the chief available details of the strength of the Pársis at different times since the beginning of the century. In A.D. 1806 there were believed to be 15,000 Parsis in Surat and 5000 in Broach (Hamilton's Description of Hindustán, I. 416). In A.D. 1816 the Parsi population including Bombay was returned at 10,000 families (1816, 615); in A.D. 1817 at 15,000 families, 6000 of them in Bombay (J. R. A. S. I.). In A.D. 1825 there were 10,000 Pársis in Surat (Calcutta Review, IX. 163-187). In A.D. 1835 there were 10,000 in Surat and not more than 35,000 in all India. (Oriental Christian Spectator, VI. 252.) In A.D. 1862 the adults of Gujarat and the north Konkan were limited at 20,000 (Briggs' Pársis). The census returns of the Bombay Presidency give their total population, excluding Native States, at 16,494 in 1872, 72,275 in 1881, and 73,916 in 1891. Including Native States their total population was 91,261 according to the census of 1891.

³ The first steam cotton-spinning factory was opened by Mr. Kárasji Nánabhai Dávar in A.D. 1851, and the first half-yearly dividend paid was Rs. 600 for a share of Rs. 5000. The first attempt to start a spinning and weaving mill in Bombay was made as early as A.D. 1845 by Prámaji Kárasji Dávar a wealthy and philanthropic gentleman of Bombay. But others did not join in the enterprise and the shares were not taken up.

Section II.

Pársis.

SETTLEMENTS.

Pársis as Colonists and Merchants.

merchants. A wealthy Pársi merchant of Broach has obtained, under the usual terms, a large extent of wasteland in the Panch Maháls and established on it a large and thriving settlement of labourers under the supervision and control of a number of Pársis whom he has encouraged to take part in the operation. The settlement after the name of its founder's grandfather is called Rustampura. Much wasteland has been turned into a fertile tract yielding cotton wheat and other crops. The Pársis of Gandevi Bilimora and Balsár rank next as merchants. They carry on a large trade in dried fish, castor oil, timber, fuel, grain, mowra flowers, and molasses. Bilimora Pársis enjoy a good reputation as carpenters. Balsár Pársis were farmers of villages in the neighbouring states of Dharampur and Bānsda and also held liquor farms and shops. In Ahmedābād and Cambay Pársi families are very few and unimportant. In Surat and Navsári Pársi figure as rich landlords, though after the crash that followed the share mania of A.D. 1864-65 many of the best and richest holdings in Surat passed from their hands. In Navsári the Desai family represents the largest Pársi landlords.¹ Many poor Pársi families in Surat still (A.D. 1898) support themselves by the old craft of weaving silk cloth, while those in the villages around Surat and in Navsári are chiefly occupied as cultivators of small farms and as drawers and sellers of palm-juice.

On the whole in Gujarāt as landlords merchants petty traders and Government and railway contractors, Pársis hold a respectable and prosperous position. Pársis enjoy almost a monopoly of liquor farms and liquor shops. They fill prominent posts in cotton and spinning factories. In the service of Government and of native states as well as in railway and municipal service they are gaining an increasing share of well-paid and honourable posts. As lawyers engineers and physicians Pársis hold their own with any other natives of India.

¹ The office of desai of Navsári has been held by Pársis since A.D. 1419 when Changa Asa who brought the Panjān fire to Navsári was appointed desai. The office remained in Changa Asa's family till, about A.D. 1595, Dastar Kekobad, the son of Dastar Meherji Rānā, was made desai. His family did not hold the office long. A few years later a Mobed named Behram Faredun secured the office as representative of Changa Asa's family of whom no male heirs were left. The *desai*ship remained in Behram Faredun's family till about A.D. 1714 when a large share of the cinolment was sold to a wealthy Mobed Temulji Rastamji Sirval since called Desai. In A.D. 1720 Temulji was discerning enough to see that the Gaikwār's power would dominate in Gujarāt. He accordingly waited on P'lājirāy Gaikwār at Songid and induced him to establish posts in the Surat Athavasi and to give him the management of the revenue affairs of the newly acquired lands. Keen rivalry continued between the descendants of Behram Faredun and the representatives of Temulji and the office of desai was held sometimes by the one family sometimes by the other. Temulji Rastamji's family was the more successful. They are now (A.D. 1893) known as the chief desais to distinguish them from Behram Faredun's family who are called Poria desais. In A.D. 1800 and 1802 Mancherji Kharsedji the grandson of Temulji Rastamji was of so much value to the British in their dealings with the Gaikwār that in A.D. 1817 the Court of Directors granted him a monthly pension of Rs. 200 for three generations. They also gave a guarantee or bake dhari that his family estate should be unmolested. The Gaikwārs continued to dispute the permanency of this guarantee, but, in A.D. 1856, the Government of India decided the point in the Desai's favour.

SECTION III.—APPEARANCE, DRESS, SPEECH.

THE Pársis are one of the fairest, and, especially the village Pársis, one of the most vigorous classes in Gujarát. In most Pársi faces the eyes are large, black, brown or occasionally gray, the nose is long straight and sometimes hooked, and the mouth and chin well cut. On the whole they are better looking and seem better fed and better off than the bulk of their Hindu and Musalmán neighbours. Most of the younger generation are free from the marks of small-pox by which many of their elders are disfigured. On the other hand the complaint is general that especially in towns the young men and women are less robust than their fathers and mothers.

Neither men nor women ever leave off either the sacred shirt called sadra or the girdle called kusti. The men always cover the head with a skullcap and the women with a white headcloth called náthábdána. Among the men the village Pársi generally shaves the whole head except the topknot, wears a carelessly wound white headscarf, a short white cotton coat reaching to the thighs, loose cotton trousers drawn up to the calves, and native shoes or sandals. At home he lays aside his short coat, and instead of his headscarf wears a skullcap of coloured cotton or silk. On great occasions he puts on a roughly folded cloth turban in shape like a Bombay Pársi's or a Surat Vánia's headdress and a long white cotton coat. Town Pársis wear in-doors a skullcap a waistcoat fine cotton trousers and slippers without stockings. Out of doors they put on a well-folded turban of dark Masulipatam or Bandri that is Masulibandri cloth spotted with white. They wholly or partly shave the head, the older and poorer keeping a topknot and two ear-locks. Of face hair they keep whiskers and mustaches but shave the beard. The turban does not differ from that worn by Bombay Pársis. The old and those who dislike change, both among the rich and the poor, generally wear a white longcloth coat, and sometimes a broadcloth or other woollen coat made in native fashion, and native-shaped longcloth or silk trousers. The well-to-do use light well-made native shoes with or without stockings, and in a number of cases light English boots take the place of native shoes. The poor use thick heavy native shoes without stockings. Most of the younger men wear coats of cotton silk or wool cut in European style, use silk or woollen trousers of European make, and stockings and boots of English pattern. The hair is worn short in English fashion. Most have whiskers and mustaches but almost all shave the chin. The priests may at once be known from other Pársis by being dressed wholly in white including the headdress, by wearing a full beard, and by not shaving the head. The dress and ornaments of a rich man are worth Rs. 450 to Rs. 2000; of a middle class man Rs. 120 to Rs. 270; and of a poor man Rs. 30 to Rs. 35.

Section III.

Pársis.

APPEARANCE.

DRESS.

GUJARAT POPULATION.

Section III.

Pársis.

DRESS.
Male
Ornaments.

Dress and Ornaments: Men.

ARTICLES.	Rich.			Middle.			Poor.
	Number	Cost.		Number	Cost.		Number	Cost.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Turbans	5 to 10	Rs. 20	Rs. 40	1 to 2	Rs. 3	8	1	Rs. 2	3
Shirts Sadras	40 to 50	20	25	10 to 20	5	10	0 to 10	2	5
Cotton Trousers	40 to 50	20	30	10 to 20	5	10	0 to 10	2	5
Silk Trousers	5 to 10	25	00	1 to 3	4	15
Waistcoats	40 to 50	20	30	5 to 10	3	5	2	1	..
Cotton Coats	40 to 50	60	80	10 to 20	15	30	2 to 5	2	5
Woollen Coats	2 to 4	40	80	1 to 2	5	25	1	5	7
Skullcaps	15 to 30	10	40	7 to 12	3	0	5	2	2
Stockings (Pairs)	40 to 50	15	25	12	3	5
Towels	40 to 50	15	20	5 to 12	2	5	3	1	1
Silk Handkerchiefs	3 to 12	0	30	3	2	6
Boots	1 to 3	5	30	1	4	8
Shoes	2 to 5	2	7	2	2	3	1	1	1
Slippers	2	1	...	1	1
Long Robes Jamris	2 to 5	0	15	1 to 3	3	0	1	2	...
Waistcloths Pichodis	2 to 5	4	15	1 to 3	2	5	1	1	...
Sacred Girdles Kustis	2	2	0	1	1	3	1	1	1
Jewelled Rings	2 to 5	100	1000	1	30	75
Gold Rings	1 to 3	10	50	2	18	...	1	0	...
Silver Rings	2	2	4
Watch and Chain	1	75	400	1	15	50

All Párisi women wind a white piece of muslin round the head and gather their hair in a Grecian knot at the back of the head. Over the sacred shirt and cord village women wear a tightfitting sleeveless bodice. The trousers are generally of coloured cotton. Over all they wind a silk robe or sári round the body passing the skirt back between the feet and drawing the upper end over the right shoulder and out of doors over the right temple like the higher class Hindu women of Gujarát. On great occasions village women wear trousers of silk instead of cotton and silk robes. Slippers are worn out of doors and occasionally in the house. On high days their ornaments are a gold necklace, gold or silver bracelets, and gold earrings, but except that widows change them for gold or silver their only every-day ornaments are glass bangles chitals. The dress of women in cities and large towns does not differ from that of village women, except that in towns they do not draw the skirt of the silk robe between the legs in Hindu fashion, but wear it hanging in loose folds so as to hide the trousers. Middle class and rich town women always wear silk robes and silk trousers, and in many cases use a sleeved polka instead of the bodice. They also wear slippers with stockings indoors as well as out of doors, and in a few cases English shoes. Their ornaments are costly, of diamonds and pearls as well as of gold. Diamond and pearl earrings have almost taken the place of gold earrings, and in very wealthy families pearl necklaces and pearl and diamond-studded bangles are also worn. A rich woman's wardrobe and ornaments are worth Rs. 3000 to Rs. 10,500, a middle class woman's Rs. 620 to Rs. 1300, and of a poor woman's Rs. 110 to Rs. 200.

Dress and Ornaments: Women.

ARTICLES.	RICH.			MIDDLE.			POOR.
	Number	Cost.		Number	Cost		Number	Cost.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Silk Robes Saree ...	10 to 25	Rs. 300	Rs. 600	3 to 5	Rs. 60	Rs. 150	2	Rs. 30	Rs. 60
Cotton Robes	2	5	7
Shirts Sadras ...	20 to 40	15	40	10 to 20	8	20	6 to 10	3	6
Silk Trousers ...	10 to 25	30	100	3 to 6	0	30	1 to 2	3	6
Cotton ditto	3	1	1
Chintz Bodices ...	20 to 40	5	10	10 to 20	3	5	2 to 5	2	4
Silk ditto ...	3	10	25	2	0	12	2	1	1
Polkas ...	3 to 5	10	20	2 to 3	6	15
Stockings ...	12 Pairs	6	15	12	4	10
Sacred Girdles Kusti ...	2	4	9	2	3	6	1	3	1
Slippers ...	3 Pairs	3	6	2	1	3	1	1	1
Gold Chains ...	2 to 3	200	300	2 to 3	50	200	1	30	60
Gold Necklaces ...	1	200	500	1	200	100
Pearl Necklace ...	1	500	3000
Diamond Earrings ...	2 to 4	100	2000
Gold Bangles & Bracelets ...	4	200	400	2	150	200
Silver ditto	1	20	30
Pearl or Diamond Bangles ...	2	1000	2000
Pearl Earrings ...	2 to 4	100	200	2 to 4	100	200	1	5	20
Gold Earrings	2	20	50	1	10	20

After they are six months old, children are clothed in a frock or jahlán of cotton if the parents are poor and of silk if the parents are well-to-do. As they grow old, cotton or silk trousers are added, and between seven and nine, when the initiation or narjote ceremony has been performed, children are dressed like grown men and women. As far as they are able, parents are fond of decking their children with gold or silver finger rings, pearl earrings, gold bracelets, and silver anklets. The wardrobe and ornaments of a child of rich parents are worth Rs. 300 to Rs. 400, of middle class parents Rs. 150 to Rs. 250, and of poor parents Rs. 60 to Rs. 70.

Dress and Ornaments: Children.

ARTICLES.	RICH.			MIDDLE.			POOR.
	Number	Cost.		Number	Cost.		Number	Cost.
		From	To		From	To		From	To
Silk Frocks ...	10 to 20	Rs. 50	Rs. 100	10 to 15	Rs. 25	Rs. 50	2 to 5	Rs. 5	Rs. 15
Cotton ditto ...	12 to 25	3	6	12 to 25	3	6	0 to 12	1	2
Silk Trousers ...	5 to 10	20	30	3 to 6	0	12	3	4	6
Cotton ditto ...	12 to 25	4	8	12 to 25	4	8	0 to 12	1	2
Silk Polkas ...	3 to 6	6	16	2 to 3	4	8
Chintz Waistcoats ...	12	5	10	0	3	12	3	3	3
Slippers ...	5 to 10	10	20	3 to 5	0	100	1	1	1
Gold Bangles ...	2	100	200	2	50	100	2	20	25
Silver ditto ...	2	2	5	10	2	5	10
Anklets ...	2	10	15	2	8
Gold Finger Rings ...	1 to 2	8	10	1	1	1	1
Silver ditto
Gold Earrings ...	2	1	2	2	1	2	1	1	1
Silver ditto	1	1	1
Silver Belt Kandora ...	1	20	25	1	20	25	1	20	25
Pearl Earrings ...	2	20	100	2	15	20

Gujarati is the home tongue of all Gujarati Parsis. Most Gujarati Parsis can speak Hindustani and a few in the south of the province know Marathi. Large numbers of Parsi youths learn English not only in Gujarati high schools but in the colleges at Ahmedabad

Section III.

PARSIS.

DRESS.
Female
Ornaments.Children's Ornaments.

SEXES.

Section III.

Pársis.

SPEECH.

Bombay and Poona. The Fársi Zarthosti Madresa in Surat and the Tátá Madresa in Navsári have been founded to teach Zend, the name in common use for the language of the Pársi holy books,¹ and Persian which most Pársi youths choose as one of their classical languages at the entrance and higher examinations of the Bombay University. In the cities and towns and even in some of the larger villages the local and Bombay Pársi Panchayat or council schools teach both boys and girls prayers in Gujaráti and Zend. The education of poor and middle class Pársi women is limited to what they learn as girls in primary schools. Most of them can read and write Gujaráti and work simple sums. Among the well-to-do and educated the higher education of women is encouraged.

¹ The language of the holy books is properly Avesta of which Zend is the commentary or translation. See Below page 211.

SECTION IV.—HOUSE AND FOOD.

Houses of town Pársis are generally large and well built, one or two storeys high, with walls of brick and mortar and tiled roofs. Village houses have generally mud walls and tiled roofs except in Ichhápúr near Surat and Eláv near Broach, where are a few two-storeyed houses as good as those in Bombay. All have a front veranda, and inside of the veranda a large hall filling the whole breadth of the house. All have a separate cooking room and a sick or lying-in room. Poor houses have only one more room or two more at the most. In rich houses the number of rooms varies from six to ten according to space, means, and requirements.

The furniture in a rich man's house varies in value from Rs. 2000 to Rs. 3000 or even more. It includes sofas chairs tables clocks cabinets mirrors pictures carpets and cushions, and in bedrooms bedsteads boxes and wardrobes. In a middle class house the furniture, including bedsteads a few chairs two or three wooden stools and a few boxes and cupboards is worth Rs. 100 to Rs. 500. In a poor house the furniture including one or two bedsteads one or two boxes and one or two wooden stools is worth Rs. 10 to Rs. 20. A rich man's house has silver water-vessels, copper and copperbrass cooking and water-vessels, cups dishes and trays, and silver and brass goblets, worth altogether Rs. 1000 to Rs. 3000. In a middle class house the corresponding vessels are worth Rs. 100 to Rs. 500 and Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 in a poor house.

Though the knowledge of the original object with which they were done has passed away, the following Pársi observances on the occasions of building a house and of digging a well are valuable examples of the widespread belief in the Place Spirit and the fear that evil will happen to the builder or digger unless the Place Spirit is either pacified or scared. The Freemason's practice of laying under a foundation-stone grain oil wine and coins, four of the greatest spirit-scarers, seems like these Pársi observances to be handed down from times when the Place Spirit was one of the most dreaded of fiends.¹ When the foundation of a Pársi house is to be laid, at the bottom of the first pit that is dug a small copper box containing panch-ratan literally Five Jewels, is placed, but in practice the box holds a small piece of jewelled metal made of gold and silver mixed with atoms of diamonds rubies and pearls. Besides the piece of jewelled metal which costs about Rs. 1½, the copper box contains a betelnut and betel-leaf, turmeric, fresh green grass, redpowder, coriander seed, and raw sugar. After the box is laid in the ground the sides of the pit are built up and its mouth is closed with brick and mortar. Over the mouth of the pit are strewn betelnut and betel-leaves dry dates and flowers, a cocoanut and

Section IV.
Pársis.
THE HOUSE.

¹ Evidence that grain oil wine and coin are among the greatest spirit-scarers is given in the Sholápur Gazetteer, XX. page 627.

Section IV.

Pársis.

THE HOUSE.

an egg are broken on it, an urn with burning frankincense is waved over it, and pieces of the broken cocoanut and some raw sugar are handed to the workmen. At the time of fixing the first door the words 'Help of Ahuramazd' are written in red paint on the door frame, a rnpe is nailed at the top of the frame, a garland of flowers and two unhusked coeanuts are hung from it along with a silk bag containing betelnut and leaf, dry dates, turmeric, fresh green grass, redpowder, raw sugar, and coriander seeds; an urn with burning frankincense is waved near the bag; a cocoanut is broken, and the pieces together with the raw sugar are handed among the workmen. The same ceremony is performed when the topmost beam or mōh is laid into which in addition the 'well-to-do drive a silver nail. When the house is finished the front gate is marked with turmeric and redpowder, garlands of flowers and green leaves are hung on it, in one of the rooms is set a goblet filled with water with a cocoanut marked with turmeric and redpowder in its mouth and a garland of flowers over it. Priests are asked to read prayers and perform ceremonies especially in honour of the thirty-three Yazads or angels, and friends and relations are called to a feast. When a well is to be dug, at the centre of the ground marked for the well, flowers are strewn, a cocoanut is broken and its water sprinkled on the ground, and priests are engaged to recite prayers in honour of Avin Arduisur, the water-spirit or angel who presides over water, and to perform ceremonies in honour of Aspadármad, the earth-spirit or angel who presides over the earth.

Food.

With Pársis eating and drinking are religious duties, because apparently, food and drink help to drive off the evil spirits and visions which haunt the fasting and weakly and which it is one of the chief objects of the Pársi religion to keep at a distance.¹ Rich and middle class Pársis take three meals a day, at morning noon and night. Their morning meal or breakfast, which they take between six and eight, consists of tea, wheat or rice bread, eggs or minced mutton, and butter. Their midday meal or dinner consists of cooked rice, split pulse dál, fish or mutton, pickles, with especially among old men, a glass of morra Bassia latifolia liquor. Their evening meal or supper, which they take between seven and nine, consists of wheat or rice bread, one to three or more dishes of mutton or fowl cooked with vegetables of different kinds, fish, pickles, and morra spirits or English liquor and wines, followed occasionally by fruit. The poor before going to work break their fast with cold thick millet bread prepared the night before and chhás or curds. At noon they have cooked rice with split pulse or curds and pickles, and in the evening millet bread with some vegetable, cooked peas and pulse, and occasionally mutton or fowl. Morra spirits are generally taken with the midday and evening meals. In sea side villages fresh or dried fish forms the principal article of food; in other places dried fish, chiefly dried bumalo Harpodon neherens, is used as a relish at all meals. Gujarát Pársis generally eat seated on a cloth from a copper or brass plate on which the whole dinner is piled. A few well-to-do families, in imitation of Bombay Pársis, use chairs and tables and eat off china plates. Most eat with their fingers. The well-to-do use mutton almost every day especially at the evening meal. Tádi or palm-juice is a favourite drink at almost all meals and especially at feasts. The monthly cost of food in a rich family of six persons is ordinarily estimated at Rs. 85, in a middle class family at Rs. 50, and in a poor family at Rs. 10 to Rs. 20.¹

¹ The belief in the spirit-scaring power of food is shown in the Pársi proverb 'He who turns wasteland into a corn-field scares the evil Ahrimán.'

Feasts or rather large dinners are given on three chief occasions, on the fourth day after a death, on marriages, and at the religious national festivals called Gahambáras. At all public dinners the guests are seated in rows on long strips of cloth about half a yard wide, spread in the streets, in long verandas, or in public places specially built and set apart for the purpose. On the ground in front of each guest is laid a large plantain leaf or plates made of the banian or other leaves called patrávals. In some cases when feasts are given by the rich, chairs and tables in English fashion are used. The first course is rice or wheat bread, one or two vegetables, meat, fresh fish, and pickles. Mowra spirit is handed round to all who wish it. The second course is rice and pulse washed down with tádi palm-juice instead of mowra spirits.² Of animal food Pársis eat, of quadrupeds, only the flesh of goats and sheep. Of birds they generally eat only the domestic hen, but have no rule or feeling against eating other birds. They do not eat the cock after it has begun to crow, because from that time the bird is held sacred, the belief being that its crowing has the effect of driving away evil spirits. Pársis do not smoke tobacco.

Section IV.

PÁRSIS.

Food.

Feasts.

¹ The details are: Monthly Food Charges for Six Persons.

ARTICLES.	Cost.			ARTICLES.	Cost.
	Rich.	Middle.	Poor.		Rich.	Middle.	Poor.
Rice	Rs. 6	Rs. 5	Rs. 4	Milk	Rs. 4	Rs. 2	Rs. 1
Split Peas Dal ...	1	2	4	Meat	8	4	1
Wheat	3	1½	1	Salt	1	½	½
Jowari	3	3	3	Pickles	1	½	½
Butter Ghi	10	6	1	Eggs	6	3	4
Fish, fresh and dried	10	6	1	Vegetables ...	6	4	1
Fuel	7	5	1½	Spices	1	½	½
Tea	2	1½	...	Snuff	1	1	½
Sugar	3	1½	...	Sesame Oil ...	1	1	½
Molasses	1	1	½	Liquor	12	6	2

² The cost of a feast for fifty persons is: Rice Rs. 1½; pulse 8 annas; wheat 12 annas; butter Rs. 2½; meat Rs. 4; spices 12 annas; vegetables Rs. 2; leaf-plates 8 annas; liquor Rs. 6; miscellaneous Rs. 2; cook's wages Rs. 3½; total Rs. 24½ or an average of about 8 annas a head.

SECTION V.—DAILY LIFE.

Section V.
Parsi
DAILY LIFE.

THE Parsis of Gujarat both men and women are early risers. The religious, who make a point of reciting prayers between three in the morning and dawn at which the Parsi day begins, leave their beds between three and four, and most others are up a good while before sunrise. All, on rising, standing at the foot of their bed, loosen their sacred cord kusti and recite the kusti prayer.¹ When the prayer is finished they take some cow's urine nerang in the palm of the left hand, and while reciting a short prayer,² rub it on their face hands and feet and afterwards wash with water the parts rubbed. The devout and those who have leisure bathe at once daily after the nerang prayer. The poor bathe once in three or four days. Every time they take a bath, that is before they commence to wash the body with water, they rub the urine three times over their whole person. After washing the body they clean the mouth and again recite the sacred-cord prayer. They are now ready either to recite further prayers or to take a light breakfast, and go to work or visit friends or the fire-temple. At noon they dine, take a short nap or go back to work, or, in the case of leisurely or retired people, play chess or cards. Clerks shopkeepers and traders have luncheon sent to them at their shop or office. Of the well-to-do those that stay at home have tea between three and five, and in the evening

¹ In reciting the prayer the reciter always faces the sun, that is he turns to the east in the morning till noon and to the west from noon to sundown. After sunset the reciter either faces a lamp or the moon if it is visible. The sacred thread or kusti prayer runs:

Let Ahuramazd be king, and let Ahrimán, the wicked holder aloof, be smitten and broken. May Ahrimán, the Devils (devils), the Drajás (evil spirits), the sorcerers, the evil Kithás (wilfully blind) and Karapas (wilfully deaf), the oppressors, the evil-doers, the Asmags (perverters of truth), the wicked, the enemies, the Faris (farics) be smitten and broken. May the enemies be afflicted. May the enemies be far off. Ahuramazd, Lord! of all sins I repent.

All the evil thoughts, evil words, evil deeds, which I have thought, spoken, done in the world, which are become my nature—all these sins, thoughts, words, and deeds, bodily, spiritual, earthly, heavenly, O Lord, pardon; I repent of them with the three words (good thoughts, good speech, good deeds)

Pleased be Ahuramazd, contempt for Angromanyus (Satan). Come to my protection O Ahura I am a Mazdaian. As a Mazdaian, a follower of Zarathustra, will I confess myself, as a praiser, as a follower. I praise the well thought sentiment, the well-spoken speech, the well done deed. I praise the Mazdaian law which is free from doubt, which removes strife, which gives harmony, and is truth. Among all that are and all that will be, the law, that which is of Zarathustra and Ahuramazd, is the greatest, the best, and the highest. I believe that from Ahuramazd all gifts come. Such is the Mazdaian law, which I praise.

² The cow-urine or nerang prayer runs: Broken broken be Satan. Ahrimán and his deeds and works are vile and accursed. May those vile and accursed deeds and works never reach or influence me. The three and thirty Amshaspinds and Ahuramazd the giver are victorious and holy.

Section V.

Pársis.

DAILY LIFE.

go to the market, the river side, or any other place where they can meet friends and gossip. They return home about seven. Traders shopkeepers and clerks stay at their offices or shops till about seven. On returning home they wash their face hands and feet, recite the sacred-thread prayer, and sup either at once or after reciting the night prayers, beginning with a short prayer before the lamp. After supper they play chess or cards or chat for an hour or two, or at once go to bed. After every call of nature all Pársis wash the face hands and feet and recite the sacred-thread prayer. In places where palm liquor is plentiful as in Navsári and in the villages round Surat, tadi or palm liquor parties of men and women are often arranged, those who join them going to the palm gardens about three and making merry till after sunset.

Pársi women rise about four, go through the sacred-thread and cow-urine prayers, wash, sweep the house and part of the street in front of the house, clean the vessels to be used during the day, bring the day's supply of freshwater from the well, sprinkle with water the whole house, the entrance, and the street in front of the house and draw lucky chalk-marks on and in front of the threshold.¹ In families which have several women, while some sweep the house and make the chalk-marks, others neatly dressed go out to fetch drinking water which is sometimes brought from a distance. By seven they have prepared tea and breakfast for the house, and cooking and other house-work keeps them busy till about noon. When the family is not large or when there are more than one woman, they find time, in priestly families, to spin wool and weave sacred threads² or in lay families to weave cotton tape and cloth. After the male members of the family have dined, the women dine, clean the dishes, rest or bathe, and spin or weave till about three. At three the house is again swept and cleaned and sprinkled with water, and about five those who did not bring water in the morning go to fetch it. On returning home they light the lamps and carry over the whole house a small metal urn of burning frankincense, and, especially on new-moon day, hang garlands of sweet flowers round the lamp. They next bake the bread and make ready the other articles which have to be cooked for supper. They sup when the men have done, clean the dishes, look after the children, see that all in the house is right, and go to bed. In rich families where servants are employed women do not fetch water or clean dishes. They pass their leisure in sewing, chatting, reading, and visiting.

When about five years old Pársi boys are sent to primary schools kept by Pársi priests or Hindu masters. The Pársi priests teach their pupils the Gujaráti alphabet and the portions of the Zend Avesta,

¹ The chalk-marks are not different from those made by Hindus. They are made of any white powder, chalk being adopted as being convenient. In most families the lucky or spirit-scaring power of these patterns is forgotten. The common belief is that any figure, line, or curve that is graceful or catches the fancy may be introduced. Those marks are made on holy days and other festive and joyous occasions. Some house-mothers make these marks daily except when in mourning.

² The wool which Pársi women spin generally comes from Káthiáwár. Ordinary wool sells at Rs. 1 to Rs. 6 the pound, and the best quality at Rs. 8 to Rs. 12. Women of priestly families earn as much as Rs. 10 to Rs. 25 a month by weaving sacred threads.

Section V.
Pársis.
DAILY LIFE.

which a child should know by heart for the sacred-thread ceremony which takes place when the child is between seven and nine. About seven a boy goes to the public school to learn Gujaráti and English. If he is the son of a priest, the boy continues to attend the priest's school both morning and evening to learn the portions of the Zend Avesta required for the Herbad or ordination¹ ceremony, the rest of the day being devoted to secular education in the ordinary schools. The boy becomes an under-priest or Herbad at twelve or sometimes later. By this time he has gained a fair knowledge of Gujaráti, arithmetic, and geography, and is able to read a little English. He is then taken from the public school and placed almost wholly under a priest from whom he learns the portions of the Zend Avesta required for the Maratub ceremony by passing which an under-priest or Herbad becomes a full priest or Mobed. The compulsory education of Pársi children in the Zend Avesta extends only to the portion required for the sacred-thread ceremony. Except for the sons of priests who mean to enter the priesthood any further knowledge of the Zend Avesta is optional. All that a layman requires is to be able to recite or to read fluently from books printed in Gujaráti character the portion of the Zend Avesta used in daily prayers. A Pársi girl when about six years old is sent to the girls' school where she is taught the Gujaráti alphabet, the portions of the Zend Avesta required for the sacred-thread ceremony, and sometimes if she belongs to the priestly class to spin wool. After the thread ceremony, till she is about ten years old, a girl generally continues to attend school from ten to five. She attends school to a later age if her parents desire her to pursue higher studies. During the rest of the day she helps her mother in house-work. She is generally married between five and twelve and till she comes of age she goes to her father-in-law's house occasionally and on holidays. After she comes of age she is a member of her father-in-law's family and occasionally visits her parents' house. Marriages at a more advanced age are becoming less uncommon.

¹ Details of the Herbad or ordination service and the maratub ceremony are given under Priests (see below pages 222 to 236).

SECTION VI.—RELIGION.

THE religion of the Pársis is known as the Mazdayasnian religion, Mazda meaning Omniscient the name of the Almighty. Thus Ahuramazda means the Allknowing Lord. In his confession of faith the Pársi declares: I am a Mazdayasnu, a Mazdayasnian through Zarathustra that is Zoroaster the Prophet, who according to one account lived about B.C. 1000 and according to other accounts even earlier. The life of Zoroaster is surrounded and overshadowed by the miraculous. He was born at Raa in Media and flourished in Bactria. The sacred books of the Zoroastrians are known as the Zend Avesta, literally the translation of the Avesta or sacred texts.¹ According to tradition in Zoroaster's time these books included twenty-one nushs or parts.² Of

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

The Sacred Books.

¹ According to Dr. Spiegel, the proper meaning of the word Zend or Zand is commentary or translation, that is the translation of the ancient texts whose Sassanian name was Avesta or Avesta (Westergaard's Zend Avesta, I. 2). Thus strictly the language of the ancient texts is Avesta. Zand is no language. But the word, meaning commentary, indicated the Pehlvi language, in which the original texts were explained and translated during the Sassanian period (A.D. 226 to 651) when the Zoroastrian writings were collected and compiled. After Nériwángsh (A.D. 720) confusion arose. The original meaning of the word Zend was forgotten, and Zand and Pehlvi being understood to be the names of two languages, Zand was applied to the language of the original texts and Pehlvi to the language of the Sassanian period. Westergaard says: This confusion so long as we have now become too universal to be corrected; to avoid it in some degree, I shall apply the term Zand to the ancient language and Zand to the Pehlvi translation.

² The names and contents of the original twenty-one parts or nushs of the Zend Avesta were:

(1) Sentias or Sentai yasts from the Zend gōstis praise or worship, comprised thirty-three chapters, containing the praise and worship of the gāzates or angels.

(2) Sentias, twenty-two chapters, containing prayers and instructions to men regarding good actions, chiefly those called judangis that is to bring men to help their fellow-men.

(3) Vahista Mathra, twenty-two chapters treating of abstinence, piety, religion, and the qualities of Zoroaster.

(4) Yashts, twenty-one chapters, containing an explanation of religious duties, the orders and commandments of God and the obedience of men, how to escape hell and gain heaven.

(5) Yashts, thirty-two chapters, containing the knowledge of this world and the next, the future life, the character of the people of the next world, the revelations of God concerning heaven, earth, water, trees, fire, men, and beasts, the resurrection of the dead and the passing of the chikrat or way to heaven.

(6) Yashts, thirty-five chapters, of astronomy, geography, and astrology, translated into Avesti under the name yimad and known to the Persians as Zandmazjan.

(7) Yashts, twenty-two chapters, treating of lawful and unlawful food and of the reward to be reaped in the next world for keeping the six Gahanbars or gatherings and the Farvardin or All-souls feast.

(8) Yashts, fifty chapters, of which after the time of Alexander the Great all but thirteen were lost, treating of the different ratas or heads of creation, kings high-priests and ministers, giving lists of Ahuramazda's or pure and of Ahrimán's or impure fishes, and some account of geography.

(9) Yashts, sixty chapters, of which after the time of Alexander the Great only twelve were left, containing a code or laws for kings and governors, an account of crafts, and a warning on the sin of lying.

(10) Yashts, sixty chapters, of which after the time of Alexander only fifteen were left, treating of metaphysics, natural philosophy, and divinity.

Section VI.
Pársis.
RELIGION.

these ancient writings there remain little more than fragments. In addition to these fragments, the sacred books of the present Pársis include more modern (200 to 500) commentaries explanations and essays.¹ The language of the early fragments is known as Zend and that of the commentaries as Pehlevi.² Few Pársis are able to read or understand either the original Zend texts or the Pehlevi commentaries. In addition to the Zend texts and the Pehlevi commentaries the Pársis have a collection of writings in Persian called ravayets meaning customs which are accepted as authoritative. These are the result of references by Indian Pársis to Persian Zoroastrians on doubtful points chiefly of ritual when in the fifteenth century a fondness for their religion was revived among the Pársis.³

Leading
Beliefs.

The leading beliefs which as a Zoroastrian the ordinary Pársi holds, are the existence of one God, Ahuramazd, the creator of the universe, the giver of good, the hearer and answerer of prayer. Next to Ahuramazd the name most familiar to a Pársi is that of Ahrimán, Angromanyus, or Satan, to whom he traces every evil and misfortune that happens to him, and every evil thought and evil passion that rises in his mind. He thinks of Ahuramazd and Ahrimán as hostile powers and in his prayers he often repeats the words 'I praise and honour Ahuramazd; I smite Angromanyus.' He believes that every man has an immortal soul which after death passes either to a place of reward beshet or of punishment duzak. The (11) Vistasp Nusk, sixty chapters, of which after the time of Alexander only ten were left, treating of the reign of king Gustasp, his conversion to Zoroaster's religion, and its propagation by him throughout the world. Of this part eight chapters remain.

(12) Chidrusht, twenty-two chapters, was divided into six parts: First on the nature of the Divine Being, the Zoroastrian faith, and the duties enjoined by it; Second on the obedience due to the king; Third on the reward for good actions in the next world and how to be saved from hell; Fourth on the structure of the world, agriculture, and botany; Fifth on the four classes in a nation, rulers warriors husbandmen and craftsmen; the contents of the Sixth are not recorded.

(13) Safand, sixty chapters, on the miracles of Zoroaster and on the Gahambáns or gatherings.

(14) Jaraskht, twenty-two chapters, treating medically of births and deaths and why some are born rich and others poor.

(15) Baghan Yesh, seventeen chapters, containing the praise of God, of angels, and of good angel-like men.

(16) Nayárum, fifty-four chapters, with a code of laws stating what is allowed and what forbidden.

(17) Husparum, sixty-four chapters, on punishment for sins, and knowledge of what is lawful and what is unlawful.

(18) Dowásruf, sixty-five chapters, on marriage between near relatives called khaetro-datha.

(19) Huskdrum, fifty-two chapters, treating of the civil and criminal laws, of the boundaries of the country, and of the resurrection.

(20) Pandidd, twenty-two chapters, on the removal of all uncleanness, the neglect of which causes evil. This is the only nusk that has come down entire.

(21) Hddokht, thirty chapters, on the wonders of creation. Of this three chapters remain.

¹ The names of the portions preserved and collected are Yashna (Ireshno), Visparatu (Visparáid), Yandidd, Yashts, Hindokht, Vistasp Nosks, Afringan, Niyayish, Gáho, some miscellaneous fragments, and the Siroznh (thirty days) or calendar.

² Of the correct meaning of Zend see note 1 page 211.

³ Details are given under History. The authoritative Ravayets date from A.D. 1478 to A.D. 1649 and number twenty-two letters. See page 189 note 3.

reward or punishment of the soul depends on its conduct during life. At the same time the due performance by its friends of certain rites helps the soul of the dead to reach the abode of happiness. He believes in good angels, who carry out the wishes of God and who watch over fire water and earth. He venerates fire and water and the sun moon and stars which Ahuramazd has made. He believes in evil spirits who are in league with and obey Ahrimán. He believes in Zoroaster or Zarathustra as the Prophet who brought the true religion from Ahuramazd. He believes that when the world becomes overburdened with evil, Soshios, the son of Zarathustra, will be born and will destroy evil, purify the world, and make the Mazdayacnian religion supreme. He calls his religion Mazdiashni din or Mazdiashni Zarhosti din, that is the religion of Mazda the Allknowing, or the religion of Mazda through Zarhost. His code of morals is contained in two sets of three words, the one set Humata, hukhta, huvrasta, Holy mind holy speech holy deeds to be praised and practised, pleasing to God, the path to heaven; the other set, Dushmata, dushukhta, dushvursta, Evil mind evil speech evil deeds, to be blamed and shunned, hateful to God, the path to hell.

Fire is the chief object of Pársi veneration and the Fire Temple is the public place of Pársi worship. Gujarát fire temples in outward appearance do not differ from the better class of Pársi dwellings. Inside they include an outer and an inner hall. In the centre of the inner hall is a small domed room, and in the centre of the room on a solid stone stool stands an urn of copper-brass or of silver in which burns the sacred fire fed with sandal and other commoner woods. Sacred fires are of three orders; the household fire called the Atesh Dádghán or Proper-place Fire;¹ the Aderán, literally Fires, the plural of Atesh Fire, because it is composed of several kinds of fire; and the Atesh Beherám, the fire of Beherám, the angel of success, which is composed of sixteen kinds of fire. Atesh Dádghán is the hearth fire which a Pársi never allows to die out. If he changes his place of residence in the same town or village he carries his fire with him to his new abode. If he goes beyond the town or village he gives his fire to his neighbours or relations who mix it with their own fire. Besides in houses the Atesh Dádghán or Proper-place Fire is kept in a fire temple known as the Agiári or Fire-place,² and also called Daremeher, that is in modern Persian the Gate of Mercy. This fire temple is set apart for rites for the souls of the dead. The Aderán, a fire of greater sacredness, is a plural word, because it is made of fire taken from the house of a member of each of the four classes of the old Persian community, of an Athornan or priest, of a Rathestar or warrior, of a Vasteriox or husbandman, and of a Hutox or craftsman.³ Each of these four fires is thrice purified by holding sandalwood chips over it in an iron sieve, this second flame similarly creating a third, and the third a fourth flame.

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Leading Beliefs.

Temples.

Sacred Fires.

Atesh Dádghán.

Aderán.

¹ Dádghán is the Pehlevi dátio fit and the Zend gatu a place.

² From the Sanskrit agni fire and dri place.

³ Only the first description of fire is at present procured from the house of a Pársi Athornan. The remaining three kinds of fire are now obtained from members of other communities, as no division of the Pársis corresponding to the classes in Persia exists at present.

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Temples.

Sacred Fires.

Aderah.

The Chief
Temples.
Atash Behram.

At each step in the process sacred texts are recited. On the next day these four purified fires are placed together in one urn with certain rites and ceremonies. On the third day the fire is installed. The members of the community flock to the fire temple to take part in the ceremony of installation, that is of placing the sacred fire on the stone stool in the centre of the vaulted room which too has in the meantime been purified for the reception of the sacred fire. A procession is formed headed by priests armed with sword and mace. After the weapon-bearing priests come two priests holding the sacred fire-urn and others carrying a silver canopy over it. Behind the urn walks the high priest, other priests, and laymen, who solemnly carry the fire from one part of the building to another and finally enthrone it on a marble or stone stool in the sacred room, and amid prayers followed by feasting and rejoicing declare it ready to receive the homage of worshippers. In one corner of the room from a bright chain hangs a brass bell which the priest rings at each watch or geh when he performs a ceremony near the fire.

The Atash Behram, that is the fire of the Angel of Success, is worshipped in four temples in Gujarat of which two are in Surat and one each in Udwara and Navsari. The difficulty of collecting and purifying the fires is the reason why so few temples have the Behram fires. Sixteen different fires are required and each of these has to be purified by igniting sandalwood chips held over it thirty to a hundred and forty-four times while priests recite prayers. Of the sixteen fires, the fire from striking flint or from rubbing wood has to be purified 144 times and united with the fire from a Parsi's house which is to be first purified forty times, and all these three fires thus made into one, fire from the burning pyre of a dead body in addition to a special cleansing has to be purified ninety-one times,² fire from lightning ninety times, fire from a dyer's furnace eighty times, fire from a brick-kiln seventy-five times, from a public bath seventy times, from a potter's kiln, from a blacksmith's furnace, from an armourer's, from a baker's, and from a distillery or an idol temple sixty-one times, from a goldsmith's sixty times, from a mint fifty-five times, from an ascetic's or a coppersmith's fire-place fifty times, from a camp or resting-place thirty-five times, and from a cattle-shed thirty times. The sixteen fires are purified in the following order, (1) burning-ground fire, (2) dyer's, (3) public bath, (4) potter's, (5) brickmaker's, (6) ascetic's or coppersmith's, (7) goldsmith's, (8) mint, (9) blacksmith's, (10) armourer's, (11) baker's, (12) distillery or idol temple, (13) rest-place or camp, (14) cattle-shed (15) flame caused by lightning, and (16) Parsi house and flint and dry wood. As each fire is purified it is brought into the fire temple and with prayers

¹ The watch or geh the first of which begins at dawn is one-fifth part of the twenty-four hours. The five watches are: Adrangh from dawn to noon, Rapitha-rangh from noon to three, Ojirarangh from three to sunset, Eccaruthomgeh from sunset to midnight, and Hosengh from midnight to dawn. The religious are enjoined to offer prayers at each watch; prayers offered in the fifth or midnight to dawn watch are the most efficacious.

² Burning ground fire is specially cleansed by making it set alight a number of logs of sandalwood.

placed in an urn. On the first of the five Gatha or Hymn Days, which are the five extra days at the end of the year, the sixteen fires are taken out of the sixteen urns and in the order in which they were purified are placed in the one urn which is to hold the Behrám fire. During the thirty days of the first following month daily prayers are chanted over the urn with the fires. At the end of the thirty days the united fires have become a Behrám fire. When the fire is ready the vaulted central fire room is purified, and on some lucky day, generally a day sacred to fire, with a procession of priests holding maces and swords, the urn with the sacred fire under a silver canopy is brought in procession and set on a stool in the second room. A sword and two maces are hung on the walls, and at each corner of the room from a bright chain hangs a brass bell which the priest rings at each watch or geh when he performs a ceremony near the fire.¹ Amid prayers followed by feasting and rejoicing the Behrám fire is declared ready to be worshipped.

Religious Pársis visit the fire temple almost daily, and on four days in each month, the 3rd 9th 17th and 20th, which are sacred to fire, almost all Pársis go and offer prayers. Men and women come to the same part of the temple and worship the fire in the same way. On reaching the fire temple the worshipper washes his face hands and feet and recites the kusti or sacred-cord prayer. Then carrying a piece of sandalwood and some money for the officiating priest, he passes through the outer hall. On entering the inner hall on which a carpet is spread he takes off his shoes and goes to the threshold of the central fire room, kneels, and again standing begins to recite prayers. The worshipper is not allowed to pass the threshold of the fire room; the priest alone is allowed to enter. Soon after the worshipper reaches the threshold one of the priests brings the worshipper ashes from the urn in a silver or copper-brass ladle. The worshipper takes a pinch of the ashes and applies them to his forehead and eyelashes and hands the priest the money and sandalwood. When his prayers are over the worshipper walks backwards to where he left his shoes and goes home.²

Besides fire the objects of Zoroastrian veneration include six Amshaspands that is the Immortal Furtherers and twenty-three *Yazads*³ or Worshipfuls. Ahuramazd ordered his name to be included among the Amshaspands, on which account in the Pársi scriptures they are known as Hafte Amshaspands, that is the Seven Amshaspands. The Holy Furtherers and the Worshipfuls are believed to preside over different objects and parts of the universe. Seven of the thirty days of each month are named after Ahuramazd and the six Immortal Furtherers, the remaining twenty days after the first twenty Yazads or Worshipfuls, and the names of the eighth fifteenth and twenty-third

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Temples.

Sacred Fires.

The Chief

Temples.

Atesh Behrám.

Objects of Veneration.
Amshaspands
and Yazads.

¹ At each watch, besides ringing the bell, the priest cleans the room, washes the footstool, arranges the cinders, and puts fresh sandal or other wood on the fire, all the while reciting the prayer in praise of the fire.

² The Pársis have (A.D. 1898) eight Atesh Behráms and 133 Agiáris. Details are given in Appendix I, page 247.

³ The Zend word yazad means worthy of worship. In the later Pehlevi writings the name yazdan derived from 'yazad' is applied to the Almighty.

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

High Festival
Days.
Jasans.

days are derived from the names of the ninth sixteenth and twenty-fourth days. Similarly seven of the twelve months of the year are named¹ after Ahuramazd and the Immortal Furtherers, and the remaining five after five of the Worshipfuls. The day of the month that bears the same name as the month is a holiday. On the name-day of each month the high priest, priests, and leading men meet in the hall of the fire temple. They sit on a carpet with trays of fruit and flowers before them and with a small fire-urn which one of the priests feeds with sandal and frankincense, and recite hymns of praise and thanksgiving in honour of the guardian angel of the month. When the prayers are over the fruit is handed round and all present are bound to taste it. This rite, which is kept by well-to-do families in their houses as well as in the fire temple on behalf of the community as a whole, is called Jasan that is feast. Among the twelve month-name days seven are especially popular and important. The first of these called All Souls Feast or Farvardin-Jasan falls on Farvardin the 19th day of Farvardin the first month of the Pársi year. This feast or jasan is performed in honour of the Frohars or Fravashis, who are supposed by some to be the souls of the dead, and by others to be beings akin to guardian spirits. As a guardian angel each Frohar receives charge of a human soul whether alive or unborn. To the All Souls Feast all guardian angels are called and honour is paid to them.

On All Souls Day Pársis go to the Towers of Silence, offer prayers for dead relations and friends and in the large yard round the Towers different families, especially families who have lost a relation during the year, spread carpets and hold private jasans. A similar ceremony with the same object and also called Farvardin Jasan or All Souls Feast is performed on Farvardin the 19th day of Adar the ninth month. The third in importance of the monthly feasts is the Meher or Meherangan Jasan or Sun Feast which falls on Meher the 16th day of Meher the seventh month. It is especially popular in Persia where at one time Meher or Mithra, the sun or sun-angel, was held in high veneration. Some of the most memorable events in ancient Persian history, the victory of Faredun over Zohak and the victory of Kaikhoshrn over Afrasiab, are believed to have taken place on the Sun Feast Day. The fourth great monthly feast is the Water Spirit Feast called Avan Arduisur Jasan. This feast which falls on Avan the 10th day of Avan the eighth month, is held in honour of the Water Spirit or the angel who presides over water. On this day Pársis go to the sea-shore or to a river-bank and pray to the Water Angel. Many throw into the sea or river coconuts sugar and flowers. Some Pársis, especially

¹ The names of the thirty days of the month are:

1 Hormazd.	11 Khurshéd.	21 Ram.
2 Bahman.	12 Moher or Mab.	22 Guvad.
3 Ardibehesht.	13 Tir.	23 Dep-Din.
4 Sharivar.	14 Gosh.	24 Din.
5 Aspendad.	15 Dep-Meher.	25 Ashi-chang.
6 Khurdad.	16 Meher.	26 Astad.
7 Amardad.	17 Sareh.	27 Asman.
8 Dep-Adar.	18 Ra-huc.	28 Zandad.
9 Adar.	19 Farvardin.	29 Mahraspand.
10 Avan or Aban.	20 Behram.	30 Aniran.

Amshaspands.

Yarabae.

Ahuraat.
Ustrat.
Spentomad.
Yohukshatbra.
Vehistosi.

Intercalary days added to the end of the twelfth month of the year and named after the five Gathas or hymns of Zoroaster.

The names of the twelve months are: 1 Farvardin; 2 Ardibehesht; 3 Khurdad; 4 Tir; 5 Amardad; 6 Sharivar; 7 Meher; 8 Aban; 9 Adar; 10 Deh (Ahuramazd); 11 Bahman; 12 Aspendad.

those who have made a vow to do so if their affairs prosper, make sweet-cakes called pollis and send part of the pollis to friends and throw some into the water either of the sea or of a river. This ceremony is performed by women. The fifth in importance of the monthly feasts is the Fire Feast Adar Jasan, which falls on Adar the 9th day of Adar the ninth month. On this day almost all Pársis go to the fire temple with offerings of sandalwood and pray before the fire. The rich and well-to-do distribute money in charity to priests and to poor Pársis who gather in the temple. The sixth or Animal Feast called Bahman Jasan after Bahman the animal guardian, falls on Bahman the 2nd day of Bahman the eleventh month. During the whole month of Bahman all try to show kindness to animals, feeding street dogs with milk and cattle with grass. The devout abstain from animal food during the whole month, and the others on at least the second twelfth fourteenth and twenty-first days, which are sacred to Bahman. The seventh feast, the Earth Feast or Aspandád Jasan, falls on Aspandád the 5th day of Aspandád the twelfth month. On this day every family brings from the priest, generally their family priest, dry sand which the priest has purified by pronouncing certain prayers over it, and a piece of paper on which a Pehlevi text is written. The sand is sprinkled in every corner of the house, and the paper is fixed on the main entrance door. The Pehlevi text on the paper runs: 'By the name of the Creator Ahuramazd, on the day Aspandád of the month Aspandád, I close the mouths of all hurtful animals, evil spirits deus, perverting spirits darys, sorcerers, elves, oppressors, the wilfully blind, the wilfully deaf, evil doers, and robbers. I do this in the name of Ahuramazd, of the valiant Faredun, of the Tester star, of the Sataves star, of the Vanant star, and of the Haptairing star.'¹

The five remaining Jasans are:

Ardibehesht Jasan, which falls on Ardibehesht the third day of Ardibehesht the second month, is in honour of Ardibehesht Amshaspand who presides over fire. Many go to the fire temples on this day.

Khordad Jasan, which falls on Khordad the sixth day of Khordad the third month, is in honour of Khordad Amshaspand who presides over water.

Amardad Jasan, which falls on Amardad the seventh day of Amardad the fifth month, is in honour of Amardad Amshaspand who presides over vegetation.

Sharivar Jasan, which falls on Sharivar the fourth day of Sharivar the sixth month, is in honour of Sharivar Amshaspand who presides over metals and is the lord of wealth.

Deh Jasan, which falls on Ahuramazd Roz the first day and on the eighth fifteenth and twenty-third days of Deh the tenth month, is in honour of Ahuramazd the Creator.

Besides the monthly jasans or feasts other festivals called Gahambárs, literally season-feasts, are held in great veneration among the Pársis. These feasts which are commonly called Gahambárs originally marked the seasons. They are held six times a year, each lasting five days, when the whole community meet on terms of equality and offer prayers and thanks and join in a common feast. The first Gahambár named Mediozarem or mid-spring, lasts from the 11th to the 15th of Ardibehesht the second month, when according to tradition heaven was

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

*High Festival
Days.
Jasans.*

*Season
Festivals.
Gahambárs.*

¹ Teshtar is the star Sirius. As a yazata or angel Teshtar presides over rain. Sataves is the principal star of the West, and is supposed by Dr. Geiger to be the star Wega in the constellation of Lyra. Vanant the dominant star of the South is identified with the star Powallant in the constellation of Piscos Australis. Haptairing or the Seven Bears is the Great Bear, the leading constellation of the North.

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Season
Festivals.
Gahambars.

Gáthás.

Muktad
Holidays.Leading High Days.

created. The second Gahambár named Medioshem or mid-summer, lasts from the 11th to the 15th of Tir the fourth month, when according to tradition water was created. The third Gahambár named Peteshem or the in-gathering, lasts from the 26th to the 30th of Sharivar the sixth month, when according to tradition the earth was created. The fourth Gahambár named Yathrem or summer's farewell, lasts from the 28th to the 30th of Meher the seventh month, when according to tradition trees were created. The fifth Gahambár named Mediurem or mid-winter, lasts from the 16th to the 20th of Deh the tenth month, when according to tradition animals were created. The sixth Gahambár named Hamaspathmedem or winter's farewell, falls during the last five days of the year, when according to tradition man was created. The five days of this sixth Gahambár are in addition to the twelve months, each of which has thirty days, and complete a year of 365 days. Unlike other days these five additional days are not named after the Holy Immortals or the Worshipfuls, but after the names of the five gáthás or hymns, which are attributed to Zoroaster himself and are the most sacred of Zoroastrian writings. From being named after the hymns, these five days have come to be called Gáthás, the first day being named Ahunvat after the first hymn, the second Ustvat after the second hymn, the third Spentomad after the third hymn, the fourth Vohukhsathra after the fourth hymn, and the fifth Veheshtanast after the fifth hymn. These five extra hymn days together with the last five days of Aspadand the last month, or ten days in all, are held sacred for the Muktad (Mukt-átmá = released soul) or ceremony in honour of the dead. In Gujarát the Muktad holidays generally last eighteen days, the first seven days of the first month of the new year being added to the regular ten days. To hold the Muktad, in each house, in a neat and clean place is raised a brick and mortar platform or an iron or brass stand. On the stand are arranged piles of brass or silver or glass vessels filled with water. Fruit is set near them and flowers are laid on and near them. Close to the platform a lamp burns night and day and at night many lamps are lighted; sandalwood and incense are burned in an urn; rich food is cooked and placed near the platforms, and ceremonies are performed in honour of ancestors and dead relations, whose souls are believed to visit the homes of their family during these days. The last of the five hymn days was formerly called Pateti or Day of Penitence, and the first day of the new year 'Naoroz' or New Year Day. By some misunderstanding the names have been reversed, and the last day is now called Naoroz and the new day Páteti.

Besides the month-name days or Jasans, the season-feasts or Gahambars, and the five Hymn days, the Pársis keep seven leading high days. The first of these is Naoroz the New Day, commonly known as Páteti, a day of universal rejoicing. It is Hormazd the first day of Farvardin the first month. On this day Pársis both men and women rise earlier than usual, bathe, put on their best clothes, and deck their children with ornaments. After offering prayers of repentance in their houses, they go to the fire-temple with offerings of sandalwood. In the streets and in the temple they give alms to the poor. In the fire-temple they offer their prayers before the sacred fire and then go visiting friends and relations the hosts offering the guests the choicest wines fruits and sweets. When two Pársi males meet they perform the joining of hands Humajor and while their hands are interlocked bless one another in the words "Let us give our strength to purity. May God guard you. May you live long and happily." After the visits are over they spend the rest of the day in feasting with their families or in attending garden parties. The second high day falls on Ardibehešt, the third day of Farvardin the first month or two days after the New Day. On this day the Rapithavan or midday ceremony is performed in the fire temple. This originally marked the beginning of summer, but by neglecting to add an extra day in leap year, the Rapithavan instead of in summer falls in September. The third high day is three days later the sixth day of the first month. It is called Khordád Sál and is believed to be the anniversary of the birthday of Zoroaster. It is kept with as much pomp and rejoicing as Pátoti or Penitence Day now New Year's Day. The fourth high day the Amerdád Sál falls the next day after the Khordád Sál on the last of the Muktád days. Holiday-makers keep it as a feast in continuation of the Khordád Sál. The fifth high day Jamshedi Namroz or Jamshed's New Day falls on the 21st of March when the sun enters Aries. This day is believed to have been fixed as the New Year's Day by Jamshed the third king of the Peshdadian dynasty. It is kept with great honour by Pársis, whose learned men hold that in early times the Pársis began and ought now to begin their new year from this day. The failure to keep to the old day, is believed to be due to the neglect of leap year. The sixth high day is Zarthostno Diso which falls on Khorsheh the 11th day of Deh the tenth month and is held sacred as the anniversary of Zoroaster's death. The seventh high day Mahrespand Jasan falls on Mahrespand the 29th day of Aspandád the twelfth month. This is called Din behe Mazdiánsni Jasan, that is the feast of the holy Mazdayasnian religion, because it is believed that on this day Zoroaster proclaimed his religion in the court of king Gustásp. As among Pársis eating and drinking are considered religious acts and fasting and penance are forbidden, all holidays are spent in feasting, rejoicing, and prayer.

Besides the leading rites and ceremonies and the keeping of feast days the Pársis have many minor practices and observances to which more or less of a religious sanction is supposed to attach. A Pársi must always keep his head and feet covered, he must never be without the sacred shirt and cord, must never smoke, must wash his hands if he ever puts his fingers in his mouth, if he eats from the same dish with two or three others he must not let his fingers touch his mouth but sling the morsel into his mouth; similarly in drinking if the lips touch the rim of the goblet the goblet should be washed before it is again used. He must return thanks to God before every meal and keep silence while he is eating.¹ After shaving his head a Pársi should bathe

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Season
Festivals.
Leading High Days.

Observances.

¹ The Pársi prayer before meals is: In the Name of God, the Bountiful, the Giver, the Loving, the Ruler Ahuramazd. Here I praise Ahuramazd who has created cattle,

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.
Observances.

before touching anything. Similarly on leaving his bed, before he can touch or do anything, a Pársi is required to perform the smaller ablu-tion, that is to wash his face hands and feet, and to perform the larger ablu-tion, that is to bathe his whole person if he has had impure dreams or has cohabited. In practice, though they know they are laid down in their religion, Pársis neglect many of these rules. Pársis are very careful regarding the ceremonial uncleanness of a woman in her periods. During her impurity a woman is not allowed to touch any person or thing. She has to sit apart on an iron bed placed in a corner of the house, her food is served to her from a distance, and all clothes which she has worn during her period must be washed before they can be again used. After sneezing or yawning old Pársis generally say Broken be Ahrimán, apparently believing that the spasm of breath in sneezing or in yawning is the work of an evil spirit. When a tooth is drawn or when the nails or hair are cut, texts should be said over them and they should be buried four inches under ground. Temple priests are careful to observe this practice. The cock is held sacred and is never killed or eaten after it has begun to crow.¹ When a cock or a parrot dies the body is wrapped in a sacred shirt sadra, a sacred thread kusti is wound round him, and he is carefully buried.

Early Beliefs.

Village Pársis conform to many early practices which they share with Hindus and Musalmáns. They make offerings at the burning pile of the Holi, offer vows and sacrifice goats and fowls to the small-pox goddess, and a few carry oil to Hanumán the Hindu village guardian. Some offer vows and make presents to the Mohar-ram shrines or tabuts and at the tombs of Musalmán saints. The faith in ghosts, magic, astrology, and witchcraft is strong and widespread. They believe that many diseases are caused by spirit-possession, and employ Musalmán Hindu or Pársi exorcists to drive out evil spirits and to cure the effects of the evil eye. Children, especially pretty children, have soot or lampblack rubbed on their eyes cheeks and brow to keep off the evil eye. In cases of sickness the horoscope is often consulted to see how the sickness will end and women sometimes put grains of rice and a copper coin in a bag, pass the bag seven times round the sick man's head, and leaving it under his pillow for a night, send the bag to a sorcerer to say if the sickness is caused by an evil spirit. Women have great faith in amulets which they buy from sorcerers and wear round their necks or in their hair to win or to keep the favour of their husbands. Strict old women never let people sleep with the head towards the north, because the north is the home of Ahrimán and his evil spirits. The howl of a dog at night is believed to foretell a death or other evil in his master's family. Similarly a crow persistently cawing is believed to be the harbinger of bad news.

has created purity, water, and good trees; who has created the splendour of light, the earth, and all good. This prayer is repeated three times.

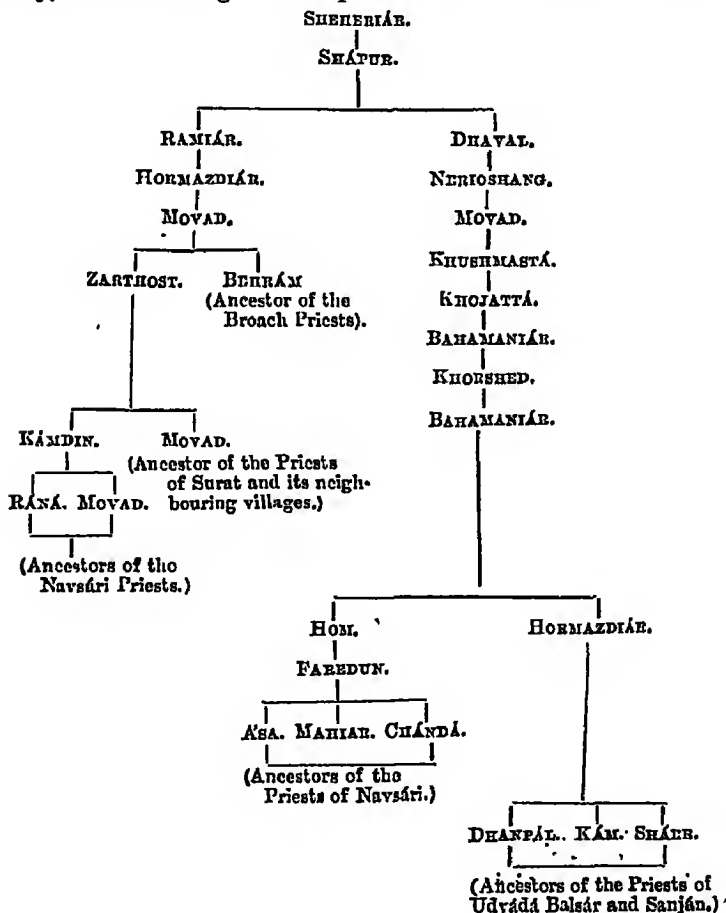

¹ The widespread belief that the crow of the cock scares evil spirits and defeats their wiles appears in the old Persian legend that when Faredun conquered the sorcerer Zohák who had usurped the throne of Persia, he chained him in a mountain cave. Every night by the help of his sorcery Zohák all but licked through his chain, but the first cockcrow made the damaged link as strong as ever.

SECTION VII.—THE PRIESTHOOD.

ALL Pársi priests in India are believed to be descended from a priest named Shápur Sheheriár who with his sons Ramiár and Dhaval and his grandsons Hormazdiár and Nerioshang (the last the translator of the Zend Avesta into Sanskrit) are believed to have been among the first Pársi settlers of the priestly caste at Sanján in North Thána (A.D. 716). The following genealogical tree shows the descent by which the priests of Navsári, Udvádá, Balsár, Sanján, Surat with its surrounding villages, and Broach, in fact all Pársi priests except those of Cambay, trace their origin to Shápur:

Section VII.
Pársis.
THE PRIESTHOOD.

Genealogical Tree.

Section VII.

Pársis.

THE PRIESTHOOD.Their Distribution.

Different branches of the original family have distributed the Pársi settlements in Gujarát into districts or charges in one of which the members of each branch alone may serve as priests. Over the priests of certain districts or divisions is a high priest called Dastur, literally Director, whose office is hereditary passing to the eldest son. The high priest does not leave his head-quarters to visit the priests under his charge but hears and settles any complaints against his priests that are lodged before him. Though the descendants of priests can alone act as priests a priest may either partly or wholly employ himself in secular business. Though their sons married the daughters of laymen the priests till lately never let their daughters marry any one but priests. The business of weaving the kusti or sacred cord belongs solely to the women of the priestly class. Lay women are not allowed to weave sacred cords and until the last few years might not spin the wool which was to be used for the girdle. Priests who are wholly or partially employed as priests differ from other Pársis by dressing in white and wearing a full beard. They are forbidden to shave the head or face or to wear even a coloured skull-cap. The men of the priestly class who are engaged in secular business are allowed to shave the head and chin and wear colours like laymen. After a priest has so far given up his hereditary position as to shave his head and wear colours he is disqualified from performing the higher priestly offices. The religious functions of a priest are to recite prayers at the houses of laymen or of priests engaged in secular work, to recite prayers and to perform rites for the dead in the house of mourning or in the fire-temple known as agidâr, to perform rites and ceremonies at the fire-temples known as Adaran and Atesh Behráw, and to perform ceremonies at the investiture of the sacred girdle and at marriages, in fact at all religious rites and ceremonies.

Higher and Lower Sacerdotal
Orders.

Priests who, as a class, are called Athornan or Athrauan in the Zend Avesta and Andhiárus or Dárus, supposed to be the Sanskrit vidiáru learned, are of two orders, a lower order called *Herbads*¹ or religious men and a higher order called Mobeds or learned men that is full priests. The son of a priest, if he is otherwise qualified, can become a Herbad or under-priest between ten and twelve and a Mobed between twelve and fifteen or twenty. To be qualified to become a Herbad or under-priest a priest's son in addition to the parts of the Zend Avesta he learned for the Navazot or investiture must learn by heart the seventy-two chapters or kás of the Yasna besides some other portions.² When the youth has learned by heart the necessary portions of scripture the purifying ceremony called Návar, that is new comrade, begins and lasts for a month. Forty days before the ceremony begins, if the youth has ever shaved, he ceases to shave so that his head may have at least forty days' growth of hair. On a day chosen as suitable by the members of the family the boy goes through the head-to-foot or Barashnum cleansing.¹ To perform this cleansing ceremony two priests, a dog, cow's urine nerang, bull's urine nerangdin,² holy ashes, pomegranate leaves, two nine-knotted nargar sticks one ending in a spoon the other in an iron nail, and some bathing vessels are required. The two priests carry these articles and with the novice and a party of male friends and relations go to the Barashnum gah or purifying place. The purifying place is an open enclosure twenty yards square. The ground is strewn with sand and across the space from west to east runs a row of stones. These stones are arranged in alternate groups of three and five, eleven groups of three and ten groups of five. When they reach the enclosure the priests set the nerang and the bathing vessels in the south of the enclosure and draw a circle round the vessels. The friends stand at some distance outside of the enclosure, and, at another spot, also outside of the enclosure, one of the priests helps the priest who is to take the chief part in the purifying rite to undress and bathe. When he has finished helping the officiating priest the second priest goes to the novice and sets him some distance outside of the enclosure, draws a circle round him, and gives him a pomegranate leaf which the novice takes in his sleeve-covered right hand. The novice chews the leaf, swallows some juice, and spits out the rest. The officiating priest gives the novice some bull's urine nerangdin in a small copper cup which he takes on his sleeved hand and sips three times saying at each sip 'I drink this to cleanse my body and my soul' and recites the Patet Pashemáni or Confession of Sin. The officiating priest holding the nail-pointed stick in his right hand and the spoon-pointed stick in his left hand, goes to the row of stones and facing east places the nail-end of the knotted stick on the first or westmost group of three stones and recites a prayer. Then starting from the north-west corner all the while repeating prayers he draws with the knotted nail-tipped stick a number of circles round the whole row of stones, and, when this is finished, retires into the circle in which are the urine and the other vessels. The second priest with the dog posts himself outside of and to the north of the enclosure and draws a circle round himself and the dog. The novice, still seated in the circle, prays to become of pure mind pure words and pure deeds, and begins to undress. When he has taken off his clothes, he rises and seats himself on the westmost of the groups of five stones that is the second of the whole row of groups. The officiating priest leaving the circle in which the urine is placed and holding the knotted sticks

¹ Herbad meaning religious is Fazaad (old Persian). The corresponding Pahlavi is Airpat and the corresponding Zend Athrapati.

² The portions of the Zend Avesta that should be learnt by a lad in preparation for the Navazot or investiture are: 1 Ashem; 2 Yatha; 3 Nerang Kusti; 4 Prayer on taking cow urine; 5 Sarosh vaj; 6 Prayer at eating; 7 Vaj Peshab; 8 Hos-Ram; 9 Khorshed Niyest; 10 Neher Niyest; 11 The five Gohs; 12 Patet; 13 Ahramazd Yast; 14 Ardibeshi Yast; 15 Sarosh Yast; Hadokht. Generally the portions marked 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 12 are learnt at this stage. For the Herbad ceremony in addition to the above the youth should know by heart: 16 Mahn Niyest; 17 Ardabekur Niyest; 18 Ata Niyest; 19 Sarosh Yast; 20 Home Yast; 21 Vasat Yast; 22 The seventy-two chapters of the Yasna; 23 Afriganam; 24 Visparid; 25 Sirya. For the Mobed or full-priest ceremony the candidate should know the Vandidad in addition to the above.

Section VII.

Pársis.

THE PRIESTHOOD.
Ordination
Herbad or
Under Priest.

¹ Barashnum is the accusative of Barashnu the top or head and means cleansing the body from head to foot.

² Nerangdin, as distinct from nerang or cow's urine, is urine drawn from a perfectly white bull which is free from blemish or spots and brought into use for religious ceremonies after the urine has undergone purifying rites at the hands of a priest or Mobed by mixing it with crystallised sand called sangreji.

Section VII.

Pârsis.

THE PRIESTHOOD.
Ordination
Hei bad or Under Priest.

approaches the novice with the spoon-pointed stick in his right hand and the nail-pointed stick in his left hand. The novice lays his right hand on his head, the priest lays the spoon-pointed stick on the novice's right hand, the novice then places his left hand over the spoon, and the priest recites a prayer. When the prayer is over the priest returns to his circle, brings from it some nerang in the spoon of the knotted stick, pours it on the novice's right palm and returns within his circle. The novice rubs the nerang all over his body and remains seated on the same group of stones. The second priest leads the dog close to the novice who touches its left ear with his left hand and the second priest and the dog withdraw into their circle. The officiating priest again issues from his circle with the knotted sticks in his hands, recites prayers near the novice, and motions him to jump to the fourth group that is to the second group of five stones. At the second group the ceremony of giving the nerang and touching the dog is repeated. The novice then one after another jumps to the sixth eighth tenth and twelfth groups, on each group, that is six times in all, taking the nerang and touching the dog. When the novice has reached the fourteenth group, the officiating priest, instead of nerang, gives him eighteen ladlefuls of sand from the spoon of the spoon-pointed stick. The novice rubs the sand all over his body and touches the dog's ear. He then leaps to the sixteenth group, the priest thrice gives him water from the spoon-pointed stick which the novice rubs all over his body, touches the dog's ear, and leaps to the eighteenth group of stones. He again receives water, touches the dog's ear, and once more leaps to the twentieth group. At the twentieth group the novice once more receives three spoonfuls of water and touches the dog's ear. When this is over the officiating priest brings out from his circle the water-pot and from it thrice pours enough water over the novice's head to enable him to wash himself thoroughly. He then returns into his circle. The second priest brings up the dog and for the last time the novice touches the dog's left ear with his left hand. The dog is then taken away. The officiating priest again comes out of his circle, sprinkles water over the clothes which the novice has to wear, washes the novice's left hand which had touched the dog's ear, and retires to his circle. The novice dresses himself, throws the sacred cord over his shoulder, and puts on his long coat and turban. He then lays the palm of his left hand covered with his coat sleeve on his left shoulder, covers the hand with the flap of his long coat, and the officiating priest coming out of his circle places over the covered hand the spoon-pointed stick which again the novice covers with the sleeved right hand. The officiating priest laying the spoon-pointed stick on the novice's left shoulder recites a prayer in the second part of which the novice joins. Then the officiating priest makes the novice recite the words: 'Impurity is destroyed, the body is cleansed, the soul is purified, the dog is pure, and the priest is holy.' The priest takes the spoon-pointed stick from the novice's shoulder who ends the ceremony by winding the sacred cord round his waist.

The novice is then taken to the daremehar or smaller fire-temple which has a large hall set apart for novices. In this hall the novice is given a bed and forbidden to touch any person or article. He has to offer a prayer at each of the five gels or watches. He is given only two meals a day, one between nine and ten in the morning the other about five in the evening and except at those meals he is not allowed to touch water. In this way he passes nine nights in retreat. On the fourth seventh and tenth day he is made to bathe and is given a change of clothes and on the tenth he is taken home. After a day or two the young priest again repairs to the place of purification to be purified a second time. The second purification is undergone for the salvation of some man or woman, either dead or alive, either a relation or a stranger. Zoroastrians believe that any one in whose name a priest is made is purified from sin, and people pay from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1000 to have a priest made in their name. The second purification lasts the same time and is marked by the same details as the first. On the tenth day the young priest returns home and there passes five full days in seclusion and religious devotion. On the morning of the sixth day a party of friends and relations are called and sprinkled with rosewater and presented with flowers. Between eight and nine the young priest bathes and puts on a suit of new white clothes, a long white coat with a white waistband white turban and a shawl thrown over his shoulders. He holds in his right hand a mace of silver or copperbrass and escorted by priests and friends starts for the Daremeh or smaller fire-temple. At the fire-temple the novice is presented before a High Priest, who permits him to undergo the final sacerdotal ceremonies.

The novice is then given in charge of two priests. He lays aside his overcoat shawl and mace, recites the sacred-cord prayer, and passes into the inner room of the temple. In the inner room are three stone stools one of which is set as a seat for the novice and on one of the other two, vessels are arranged and on the other which is some distance in front is a metal urn holding burning fire. The novice while reciting a prayer is made to wash and clean the fire-urn stool, and is then taken to his stone seat, where, under the guidance of the two priests, he uses the articles arranged in front of him in performing the ceremony called Yasna. The Yasna lasts about two hours and while it is going on the people leave. When the Yasna is over the young priest recites some more prayers and is given a light meal. He passes the rest of that day in prayer and meditation in a retired spot. On the two following days and in the morning of the fourth day he goes through the same ceremonies as on the first. During these three days he is not forbidden to touch anything or any person, but he is given only one light meal a day, because should he overeat himself and be sick or otherwise doffed he is called Nabud or a nonentity and for the rest of his life is disqualified from becoming a priest. On the fourth day his relations and friends bring him home and from this day he ranks as a Herbad or under-priest.¹ As an under-priest he receives the title of Ervad, which is a corruption of Herbad, and his name is entered in the Fehereh or priestly genealogies.²

Section VII.

Parsis.

THE PRIESTHOOD.
Ordination
Herbad or
Under Priest.

¹ In religious ceremonies the son of a priest who has not become a Herbad is called Osta that is one who has lost privilege, and a layman is called Behedin that is of holy religion, as Ervad Sheriar, Osta Erach, Behedin Bahaman.

² In these Fehereh or priestly genealogies any Herbad can trace his origin to hâpur.

Section VII.

PÁISIS.

THE PRIESTHOOD.Ordination
Mobed or Full Priest.

To pass from a Herbad or under-priest to be a Mobed or full priest, the youth, who has generally been two or three years a Herbad and is fourteen to sixteen years old, has to learn the Vandidád. After he is duly qualified in the necessary parts of the Zend Avesta the Herbad goes to the Barashnumgáh or place of purification, goes through the Barashnum or cleansing with the same details as in cleansing for admission to be a Herbad. On the tenth day after the cleansing is over, bathed and dressed in new clothes, he goes through the Yasna ceremony at the Daremeher with the same details as during the novice's four days preparation for the Herbadship. On the night of the tenth day from midnight till morning the candidate recites or reads aloud the Vandidád Sade or Vandidád Code which includes the Yasna, Vandidád, and Visparad. On this occasion all the vessels are arranged on the stone stool in front of the candidate and are used during the rites and the fire is kept burning on the third stone stool further in front. On the day after these rites are completed the candidate has gained the rank of a Mobed or learned man. He is now fully qualified to perform religious rites and ceremonies at the Daremeher or smaller fire-temple, and all other functions of a priest. He is now said to be a Mobed with barashnum, that is in a state of purity. He must never be bareheaded and never shave his head or face. If his turban happens to fall off, or if he travels by rail or sea his barashnum or state of purity ends and he is unable to perform rites and ceremonies in the fire-temple till he again goes through the cleansing ceremony in the place of purification and passes nine nights in retreat at the smaller fire-temple and performs the Yasna ceremony on the morning of the tenth. Besides to purify himself a Mobed who is paid to do it sometimes goes through the cleansing rite for the salvation of some man or woman among the laity. While a priest is in a state of purity he must lead a strictly pure life and must eat no food cooked and drink no water drawn by any one but a man or woman of the priestly class.

According to the Raravels or Persian precepts the perfect priest must be Avije Him that is of pure life, Asnidhe kherad of high talent, Din aspnargán devoted to religion, Yazdan manidar mindful of God, Mino vinashne fixed on the next world, Pak manashne pure in mind, Rast gavashne true of speech, Kherdi kunashne wise in act, Yozdathre tan holy in body that is free from bodily defects, Shivá kezúán of sweet speech, Narm Nask a distinct reciter, Rast Avesta a correct reader of the Avesta, Pádiab Sázeshe an observer of cleanliness, Hiv nirang learned in the ritual, and Náver jivam devoted to religious practices.

A man with any bodily defect or disease, who is hunchbacked, of defective sight or hearing or afflicted with leprosy or itch is disqualified from being a priest, and is forbidden to go through the Martab or Mobed-making ceremony.

Sheheriár. The following genealogy of a Navsári Herbad is given as an example: Khorshed, Noshervan, Bichá, Hormazd, Bacha, Manek, Noshervan, Hom, Rustam, Hom, Faredun, Hana, Hom, Máhiár, Chsuiar, Váceha, Ása, Faredun, Hom, Bama-niár, Khorshed, Bamaniár, Khojestá, Khushmasta, Movad, Neriosang, Dhaval, Chapar, Sheheriár.

SECTION VIII.—CUSTOMS.

THE chief ceremonial occasions in a Gujarát Pársi family are first pregnancies, births, sacred cord-girdings, marriages, and deaths.

The first ceremony connected with a Pársi girl's first pregnancy is the Panchmásin or fifth-month ceremony. On a lucky day in the fifth month her husband's parents present the girl with new clothes worth Rs. 20 to Rs. 50, or in poor families with Rs. 3 to Rs. 7 in cash. A more important pregnancy ceremony called Agarni takes place in the seventh month. At an hour in the morning or evening of some Thursday or Sunday in the seventh month which a Hindu or Pársi astrologer has fixed as lucky, female friends and kinswomen meet in the front hall of the husband's house. In the centre of the hall lucky chalk-marks are drawn and inside of the marks is set a low wooden stool made without metal nails. The girl stands on the stool and puts on the new clothes which her husband's parents have presented her. The clothes include a silk robe sári, silk trousers, a sacred shirt sádra, a sacred girdle kusti, a headcloth, a bodice or polka, and new shoes together worth Rs. 80 to Rs. 100. Garlands generally of daisies and roses are thrown round her neck and her brow is marked with red powder in which grains of rice are stuck. When the girl is dressed the women who have dressed her throw rice over her head and bless her. In blessing the girl the women perform the salutation known as Oranna or (Evil) Removing. In making this salutation women spread the fingers over the head and face of the person to be blessed, raise their fingers to their temples, and crack their finger joints. Then the girl's mother-in-law or sister-in-law fills her lap with sweet-balls, a cocoanut, dried dates, almonds, and betelnuts and betel-leaves mixed with sesame seed and lemon lijora or pomegranate. Carrying these things in her lap accompanied by female friends and kinswomen and followed by trays of sweet-balls and a basket of wheat, the girl goes to her parents' house. At the threshold her mother or some other elderly woman waves round her head a copper or brass plate with rice and water in it, throws the contents at her feet, breaks an egg and a cocoanut, and welcomes her to the house. In entering the house the girl steps with her right foot first. She empties the sweetmeats cocoanut dates and fruit out of her lap into a winnowing fan, and, with a lump in one hand and a goblet of water in the other, passes to the lying-in room which has been made ready for her, and, with the object of driving evil spirits out of the room, goes round it seven times pouring water all the time. Sweetmeats are given to the girl and the women who came with her, who taste them and return with the girl

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Pregnancy.

Section VIII.

Pārsis.

CUSTOMS.

Pregnancy.

to her husband's house. About half an hour after they are gone, a second party starts from the girl's mother's house with a complete suit of clothes for the girl's husband worth Rs. 10 to Rs. 50. The party are received at the threshold of the husband's house in the same way as the girl was received at her mother's threshold. They hand over the dress, taste the sweets, and return. From both houses sweets are sent to friends and kinspeople. Some families also ask male and female friends to dinner and spend the day as a holiday.

Birth.

When her time of delivery draws near the young wife goes to her father's house. A midwife, who is generally a Hindu of the Hajm or barber caste, is sent for and the girl is taken into the lying-in room and laid on an iron cot. When the child is born the midwife cuts the navel cord and the cord and after-birth are placed in an earthen pot and buried. The child is at once sprinkled with water and the exact hour of its birth carefully noted. A metal plate is beaten close to its right ear and water in which a twig of the Persian *hom*¹ Aselepias acida or Sarcostemma viminalis bush has been dipped is sweetened with sugar and dropped into the child's mouth. As soon as the child is born a messenger starts to carry the news to the father. The birth of a male child being always most desired, as soon as a male babe is born, any of the relations or friendly neighbours or servants hasten to convey the glad news to the father who according to his means or the joy he feels gives the messenger a rupee or more. When they hear that a child is born the husband's mother and some of his kinswomen go to the girl's. The husband's mother throws three to nine rupees on the girl's bed and distributes money among the servants. The girl's parents present the husband's mother with a robe and she returns home. If the parents are longing for a son and if the child is a boy, as soon as he is born the boy is handed to the nurse and hidden, and instead of the child some cowdung is shown to the mother.² The boy is then laid on a winnowing fan and is bought from the nurse for Rs. 1½ and handed to his mother. At the same time the nurse bores both his ears with the end of an unhusked grain of rice. For five days after a birth the mother is fed on light food and the child on sugar and water. On the second day after the birth a trayfull of sugarcandy among which five or seven rupees are laid are sent from the husband to the mother. On the morning of the fifth day, in the mother's parents' house five

¹ Hom water is prepared in the smaller fire temple or Agari by beating in water, accompanied with recitations of texts, twigs of the Persian hom Aselepias acida plant. The early Persians believed that the hom gave great energy to body and mind. An angel is believed to preside over the plant and the Hom yast is devoted to its praises. The Persian hom is believed to be the same as the famous intoxicant the Vedic soma.

² Elderly Pārsi women say that this is done to prevent the mother from going into paroxysms of joy or hysterics. This may also be done to guard the boy against the evil eye and evil spirits. The object of showing the mother cowdung probably is that any evil which there may be in her glance may be driven out by the spirit-scaring cowdung. With this practice of making a person look at cowdung apparently as an evil-eye-scarer compare the Hindu mother's remark to any one who overpraises, or as the Scotch say foretells, their child, 'Look at your fool, it is covered with excrement.'

kinds of vegetables or bhájis are cooked with or without eggs or sheep's brain, fowls, small round chappátis or cakes, and sweet preparations of dry-ginger and wheat. These things are laid near the mother's bed in the dishes in which they were cooked. Five cakes are set at the foot of each of the four bedposts, five are thrown on the bed, and a little of the cooked food is set in the mother's dish. Then betel dry dates rice and redpowder are dropped into the mother's hands. The mother takes some redpowder and with it marks her brow, the legs of her cot, and the legs of the child's iron cradle. After this a kinswoman drops frankincense on a fire-urn and declares that the fifth day or pachori ceremony is over. Large quantities of all the cooked things arranged in separate dishes are sent to the husband's. In some families, especially in villages, the mother is bathed from head to foot on the fifth day. If for any reason this ceremony is not performed on the fifth day it is performed on the tenth, and called dasori. On the fifth or other convenient day an astrologer, who is either a Bráhmán or a Pársi priest, is called and told the hour of the child's birth. On hearing the hour the astrologer draws chalk-marks on a wooden board and tells the parents several names any of which will prove lucky to the child. The parents generally choose one of the names mentioned by the astrologer. But if they are much set on some family name, they sometimes call the child by it, though the astrologer did not mention it.¹ On the night of the sixth day lucky chalk-marks are drawn at the head of the mother's bed, a nailless stool is set over the marks, and on the stool is placed a tray with a cocoanut some rice and betel and a blank paper an inkstand and a reedpen that the goddess Chhathi or Sathi that is Mother Sixth, may write the child's destiny. On the tenth a tray of sugar-cakes is sent from the husband's to the mother. Within twenty days of the birth presents called vadhavo are sent from the husband's, consisting chiefly of money to meet the charges to which the wife's family have been put, dresses for the child, and materials for a feast, spices, fowls, liquor, honey, and mutton, varying in value from Rs. 15 to Rs. 100. Up to the fortieth day the mother is kept in the lying-in room carefully tended but not allowed to move or touch anything. On the night after the fortieth day, the mother is bathed and purified and allowed to move among the people of the house. The sacred shirt and cord she wore at the time of the birth are buried, and all the furniture of the lying-in room except the iron bedstead and cradle is given to people of the sweeper caste. Before the child is six months old, and generally

Section VIII.

PÁRSIS.

CUSTOMS.

Birth.

¹ The names are either Persian or Hindu. The commonest Persian names for boys are Ardesbir, Bamonji, Beheramji, Hormasji, Johángir, Kharsetji, Nasurwánji, and Sorábjí; and for girls Gulbái, Khurshedbái, Meherbái, Pirozbái, and Shirinbái. The commonest Hindu names for boys are Bhikhtáji, Dádábháí, Dhanjibháí, Dossábháí, Kuvarji, Mánekji, and Ratanji; and for girls Mithlibái, Ratanbái, Rupabái, and Sonábái.

Every Pársi male, when addressed in full, has three names, as Pestonji Rastomji Ghándi, Pestonji being the personal name, Rastomji the father's name, and Ghándi literally grocer, the family name, which is generally taken from some craft or calling and which may be changed at the pleasure of the family. Like the men Pársi women have three names, their personal name and their father's name and surname till they marry, and after marriage the husband's name and surname. Unlike a Hindu woman a Pársi woman does not change her personal name when she marries.

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Birth.

before the end of the first forty days, an astrologer, either a Pársi priest or a Bráhmaṇ, is asked to prepare a horoscope. The horoscope, which is a roll of paper about nine inches wide and ten feet long, costs Re. 1 to Rs. 2, is kept with great care in a box or press, and, before a marriage is fixed, is compared with the horoscope of the other party to the engagement. Before any important undertaking the horoscope is read over to see what are the owner's lucky days and times of life, and, if the owner falls seriously ill, the horoscope is examined to see whether he will get better or die.¹ In the third or fifth month after the birth of her child the mother goes to her husband's house, taking from her father dresses and toys for the child, a wooden cradle and bedding, and sugar-cakes and a basket of wheat. This presentation is called Joripori literally meaning cradle and its appurtenances. On this day, or soon after, two ceremonies called Palli and Chokhiar are performed by way of thanksgiving. The palli consists of preparing sweet-balls and in the morning or evening carrying some to the sea or river side and throwing them into the water with a cocoanut sugarcandy and flowers as an offering to the water spirit. In the chokhiar ceremony turmeric and redpowder marks are drawn on a wall of the room in which the ceremony is to be performed and in front of the marks small heaps of rice pulse and wheat are laid along a large low bench; goblets filled with water are brought by married unwidowed girls and set near each heap in two or three piles, each pile topped with a cocoanut; and near the waterpots are laid red yarn, betel, dry dates, jasmin oil, and redpowder. Four young unmarried boys or girls, bathed and clean-dressed, are seated in a row in front of the bench, jasmin oil is rubbed on their hands, their brows are marked with redpowder, and red yarn is wound round their right ears. They are served with cooked rice pulse milk and sugar which has previously been offered to the Māta or Mother that is to the spirit of the day, by throwing frankincense on a fire-urn in the room. The heaps of grain are given to the poor, and the other articles including the water in the goblets are thrown into the sea or into a river. The yellow and red wall marks remain for a week. Families who have adopted the new ideas have dropped the palli and chokhiar ceremonies.

Guths
Vows.

Married women who have been barren for some years sometimes promise, if a child is given them, to perform certain ceremonies; These promises are called guths or vows. The chief of these vows is the Beheramini vow, under which, on the birth of a child the woman lives on fruit and water for twelve days and performs some of the following rites. On the twelfth day after the birth of a child a lamp fed with clarified butter, with a tiny yellow flag waving near it, is placed near the entrance to the house. In the room in which the child was born are laid in a tray twelve twigs of the milkbush Opuntia vulgaris, twelve betelnuts and twelve betel-leaves, twelve dry dates, and some grain soaked in water. At midnight the mother with the child in her arms goes to the entrance of the house where are the lamp and the flag, rubs some soot which is given to her from the lamp on her own and the child's eyes and returns to her room. Then each of the twelve sets of the articles in the tray are thrown near twelve entrances to the house,¹ and near each entrance an egg is broken. This has apparently also the object of guarding the child from the evil eye and evil spirits. The child who, in cases of vows like this, has not yet been laid in the cradle is now placed in it. If a woman has taken the Khambátini Goth or vow, as soon as the child is born a clay image is set opposite the mother's bed. Before suckling the child, drinking water, or taking medicine or food the mother asks permission of the image to do so. If a woman has taken the Kharásni Goth or vow on the sixth day after the birth of the child, the men of the house must eat with bare heads. If they refuse some men are paid to eat with uncovered heads. Some Pársis make a compromise between the vow and their religious duty by eating with half of the head bare. When a boy whose mother has taken a Kharás vow is married a goat is killed and the boy's brow is marked with its blood. These vows if once taken become hereditary in the male line of a family, that is they have to be taken by the wives of the sons and grandsons, who have to perform the rite on the birth of every child. Still the woman who performed the last vow may at any time stop the practice by performing palli that is by throwing frankincense over a fire-urn, offering sweetmeats, and begging that her descendants may be freed from the vow. When the child enters on its seventh month the sitting or Desná ceremony is performed. The child is dressed in a new silk frock and cap, its brow is marked with redpowder, and it is made to sit on a stool placed on lucky chalk-marks. As it sits the child touches a cocoanut, which is then broken. The first birthday, and all birthdays to a less extent are days of joy and feasting, and friends and kinspeople send the child presents.

¹ Except when a person dies old the horoscope is generally destroyed after its owner's death.

Pársi boys and girls are received into the Zoroastrian faith between the age of seven and nine. The ceremony which consists of clothing the child with a sacred shirt called *sadra*² and a sacred cord called kusti,³ is the Navzot or making a new believer. On the day fixed for the ceremony the house is set in order, the family dress in their gayest, and relations and friends are called and treated to a feast. About seven in the morning the child is seated on a stone slab, and, guided

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CRISTOSIS.

Goths
Vows.Navzot
Initiation.

¹ If a house has less than twelve entrances the remaining sets are thrown in corners.

² The sacred shirt or sadra typifies the coat of mail with which the Zoroastrian withstands the attacks of the evil one. It is of very thin muslin for the rich and of stronger texture for the poor; it has short sleeves and falls a little below the hip. The cloth is brought from the market and the shirt is generally sewn by poor Pársi women. It costs 6 annas to Rs. 3 each. The sacred cord is of wool and is made by the wives and daughters of Pársi priests. A cord costs 6 annas to Rs. 5.

³ In putting it on the cord is passed three times round the child's waist. At the second round two knots are tied in front and at the end of the third round two knots are tied behind. While tying the first front knot the child says in his mind 'There is only one God, and he is the creator of all good things.' When the second front knot is tied he says 'The Mazdashni religion is the true religion.' When the first back knot is tied he says 'Zoroaster is the true prophet of God,' and when the second or last is tied 'Through my whole life I will strive my utmost to do what is good and right.' This practice is to be continued throughout life by all every time the kusti or cord is girded.

Section VIII.

Pārsis.

Customs.

Narsot
Initiation.

by a priest, offers a prayer, thanking God for the gift of life and for the beauty of the world. The child chews a pomegranate leaf swallowing the juice which, like the hom Aselepias acida juice, is believed to purify. After chewing the pomegranate leaf the child takes three sips of bull's urine nerangdin repeating between each sip the words 'I drink to make my body clean and my soul holy.' The child then recites the Patel or confession of sin, is undressed, rubbed with bull's urine, and bathed with cold or hot water warmed by the priest. When the bath or nahan ceremony is over the child is brought into the hall, where friends and kinspeople are seated on a large carpet. The child is set on a slightly raised central seat facing the east dressed in a trousers a cap and a muslin shouldercloth. The officiating priest sits in front of the child with other priests on either side of him. The priests repeat the confession of sin, the child joining in the prayer, holding the sacred shirt in its left hand. When the ceremony is over the senior priest draws near the child who rises and standing repeats the words 'The good, just, and true faith that has been sent by the Lord to his creatures is the faith which Zarthost has brought. The religion is the religion of Zarthost, the religion of Ahuramazd given to Zarthost.' As the child repeats these words the priest draws the shirt over its head. Then the child takes the sacred woollen cord in both hands, and the priest holding its hands, says 'By the name of the Lord Ahuramazd, the magnificent the beautiful the unseen among the unseen, Lord help us.' When this is over the priest repeats the sacred-thread prayer in a loud voice, the child joining him. While the prayer is being recited, the sacred thread is wound round the child's waist the ceremony ending by the child repeating the words 'Help me O Lord! Help me O Lord! Help me O Lord! I am of the Mazdiashni religion, the Mazdiashni religion taught by Zarthost.' The child is again seated and the cord-girding ends by the priest reciting blessings and throwing on the child's head rice pomegranate-seed and cocoa-kernel.

Betrothal.

Village Pārsis often marry their children while still in infancy. In days gone by children were sometimes conditionally contracted in marriage before they were born. When two families agree in wishing their children to marry, they exchange their children's horoscopes, which are sent to an astrologer, generally a Pārsi priest, who settles whether the marriage is likely to be fortunate. The offer of marriage may come either from the boy's or from the girl's family. It is generally made by the poorer family. If both families approve of the match and the stars are favourable the marriage is agreed to. Soon after on a lucky day, the women of the boy's family go to the girl's to return her horoscope. They take with them a suit of clothes, silver foot ornaments¹ for the girl, sugarcandy, curds, and fish as emblems of good luck, and present the dress to the girl in front of a lighted ghi-fed lamp into which a rupee is dropped. The cost of the clothes ranges from Rs. 15 to Rs. 100 and of the ornaments from Rs. 10 to Rs. 75. The bearers of these presents are entertained by the girl's mother with sweetmeats and a few rupees are presented to each, the total varying in value from Rs. 15 to Rs. 30. According to her means the girl's mother sends her future son-in-law a silver a gold or a diamond ring, a suit of clothes, and Rs. 5 to Rs. 25 in cash. This completes the betrothal which though not legally is practically binding.

¹ The foot ornaments symbolise the girl's passing under the lordship of her husband.

During the uncertain interval between the betrothal and the marriage presents of fish and other tokens of goodwill pass between the families. On a lucky day ten to fifteen days before the marriage comes the turmeric-pounding ceremony. At both houses kinswomen meet and choose four young married and unwidowed girls to pound turmeric and shake it in a winnowing fan, while songs are sung. After the turmeric-pounding the two families begin to lay in stores for the marriage feast. The time between the turmeric-pounding and the marriage day is set apart for marrying and during these days no ceremonies are performed in honour of the dead. About eight days before the marriage day comes the booth-building or mandav ceremony. A Parsi with a shawl or a woman's silk robe wrapped round his head and a redpowder mark on his brow, digs a pit near the entrance to each house, some silver and gold are thrown into the pit, and mango and samri Prosopis spicijera twigs are planted in it. Red and yellow marks are made on the wall and near the hole frankincense is burned and songs are sung. Either before or after the turmeric-pounding, sometimes even on the marriage day, the Adarni or inviting ceremony is performed. On the adarni day the mother of the boy with kinswomen and friends and with music goes to the girl's and dresses the girl in clothes and ornaments. The girl's mother entertains the party with sweetmeats and presents the boy's near kinswomen with dresses. After they leave, a party of kinswomen and friends set out from the girl's with clothes for the boy who in return presents the girl's mother with a dress. Next day the girl's mother returns this dress to the boy's mother accompanying it with a few rupees, as it is thought wrong for the girl's parents to receive presents from the boy's side. On the third day before the wedding a suit of clothes and a large silver coin, a Persian rihal, a Mexican dollar, or a five-franc piece, are sent to the bride, who wears the coin round her neck till the marriage ceremonies are over. Towards evening the women of the family seat the boy and girl in front of their respective houses, rub them with the turmeric which was pounded fifteen days before, and bathe them with fresh water. When the bathing is over they are seated on a wooden nail-less stool, are lifted into the house by four married and unwidowed girls, and carried seven times round the lucky chalk-marks in the centre of the hall. A basin filled with clarified butter and raw sugar is held near them, frankincense is burnt before them, and they are asked to foretell what the various grains will cost during the year. If the bridegroom and bride are grown up, the bridegroom's turban or the bride's robe or sári is laid on the wooden stool and carried round the chalk-marks. Next evening, in their own houses, the boy and the girl are again seated on stools and piles of sugar cakes and sweetbuns or polis are laid in front of them and yarn is wound

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Fore-Marriage
Observances.

Section VIII.

Parsi.

Customs.

Fore-Marriage
Observances.

round them. The sugarcakes and buns are handed round among friends and relations. A small dish of khichri mixed rice and pulse is cooked and in the mixture a lighted wick fed with clarified butter is set and placed near the boy or the girl. The feet of the boy or of the girl are made to rest on an earthen dish in which are a cowdung cake, a rice-biscuit sario, and a gram-biscuit papat. Along with four married girls the boy and the girl are made to eat mixed rice and pulse khichri and gram biscuits. As they rise they are made to break the earthen dish under their feet; the wick in the pulse and rice dish is put out, and the pulse and rice is made into a ball and eaten by women as a cure for barrenness. The next day is spent in religious rites and ceremonies performed by priests or Mobeds in honour of ancestral spirits who are called to bless the marriage. At the same time five seven or nine clay jars filled with water are set in a row marked with yellow and red, and crowned with rice-biscuits gram-biscuits and sugared wheat-cakes. Some of the women hold a new sári or silk robe over the pots. One of the women beats a copper dish, and, calling them by name asks the ancestral spirits to attend. One woman comes running in barking like a dog. The other women drive her away, and with fun and laughing eat all the things they can lay their hands on.

Marriage.

On the fourth day the marriage ceremony is performed. During these four days, if the families are rich, or only on the marriage day if they are poor, large parties of friends and kinspeople are asked to dine and sup. On the day before the feast the women of the family go to their female friends and ask them to join the marriage ceremonies and feasting. The men are called by a priest, who with a list of names goes from house to house and gives the invitation. Near relations and leading members of the community are visited and invited by the father or some member of the family. In towns some families send printed notes of invitation. At dawn on the wedding day the women of both families sit in their houses on a carpet, singing songs describing the festivities and asking blessings.¹

¹ The following is the substance of one of the most popular marriage songs :

O maidens, the luck-bringing sun has risen ; he has risen on our joyful garden ; he has risen at the gates of God. Now the cool west wind brings blessings, and the luck-bringing sun shines over the Fire-Temple, over the sea, over the gates of the father and father-in-law, over the marriage porch, over the children and grandchildren, over the married women, over the whole families of the bride and bridegroom, over the neighbours and the streets and suburbs, over sovereign and subjects, over governors and officials, over mother-earth and over mountains and hills. With fresh champa and jasmine, with trays of pearls rice and redpowder, we welcome the sun and the west wind. How do we know that the joyful west wind blows ? By the note of the koel on the mango-tree, by the song of the women in the house, by the noise of fife and drums in the marriage porch, by the music of the flute in the woods, by the clashing of cymbals in the marriage porch, by the pearls strewn at the threshold, and by the trays full of champa flowers and crysanthemums. Now in the large hall where are trays of champa flowers and crysanthemums the father of the bride comes, the priests recite prayers, and the bride's father gives alms and offers bright rupees. The mother of the bride wears a necklace of nine strings and the priest recites prayers over the bride and bridegroom ; the bride's mother gives the priests presents of rupees and shawls and scarfs. The bride's mother gives coins shawls scarfs turbans rich robes and necklaces to the son-in-law and his father and mother. In the evening the porch is adorned with sugarcandy betelnuts and leaves dry dates and rice. Nobles, merchants, and bankers attend and honour the wedding.

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Marriage.

At their homes the bride and bridegroom undergo the same purification as when they were invested with the sacred shirt and cord. At both houses carpets are laid and rows of benches are set in the streets and neighbouring verandas. About four in the afternoon the male guests dressed in white robes reaching to their feet and girt round the waist with a long white cloth, begin to come and take their seats on the carpets and benches. While the guests are gathering, a party of women come from the bride's to the bridegroom's, one of them bearing in a large tray presents of clothes and a silver or copper-brass hair-comb and a pot of curds, and another carrying, one over the other, three water-pots filled with water, the topmost crowned by a cocoanut. The water pots and the cocoanut are marked with red and yellow powder. This procession is called sopára. While they stand at the door of the house the bridegroom's mother or some other near relation waves over the head of the present-bringer a small tray filled with water and with a few grains of rice in it, throws the water at her feet and breaks an egg and a cocoanut. When they have entered the bridegroom is called to dip his fingers in the water goblets, and while he dips them he drops one to five rupees in the water which belong to the bride's sister. The women give and receive presents and return to the bride's. Between five and six in the evening the male guests who have met at the bridegroom's with native music, and sometimes in the larger towns with music played on European instruments, follow the bridegroom and the high priest to the bride's. Before the party starts a fisherwoman appears and holds a fish near the bridegroom for good luck, and for her service is given a few rupees. When the bridegroom begins to move a cocoanut a few sugar-cakes and dry dates are waved round his head and thrown away. The bridegroom, who is called Var-Rája or the marriage chief, is dressed in new clothes, a Masulipatam cloth turban, a long white robe falling to his ankles with a strip of white cloth about a foot broad wound many times round his waist, a shawl thrown over his left arm, a garland of flowers round his neck, a red mark on his brow, and a bouquet and cocoanut in his right hand. Sometimes the bridegroom goes to the bride's on horse-back, his place in the procession being after the male and before the female guests. The female guests follow the men, the bridegroom's mother leading them holding in her hands a large brass or silver salver containing a paro or paper-cone of sugarcakes betelnuts and leaves dry dates and rice with a suit of clothes for the bride and jewels generally worth Rs. 300 to Rs. 1000. At every street corner, to appease evil spirits, a cocoanut is waved round the bridegroom's head, broken, and thrown away. On reaching the bride's the bridegroom is led to the door, the men of his party take their seats on carpets and benches, and the women stand behind the bridegroom at the door. At the threshold, as the bridegroom enters, the bride's mother waves seven times round his head a copper-brass plate with rice and water in it, throws the contents under his feet, breaks an egg and a cocoanut, and welcomes him into the house asking him to set his right foot first and puts a ring on his finger. The bridegroom's father seats the bride on his lap if she is a child, and presents her with gold and silver ornaments. After this the wedding ceremony begins.

Section VIII.

Pārsis.

CUSTOMS.

Marriage.

Bouquets and betel-leaf are handed to all male guests. The women sit round on carpets, and in the centre the bride and bridegroom are seated on chairs facing each other. Their right hands are tied together with cotton thread and a curtain-like cloth is held between them. One priest posts himself near the bride and another near the bridegroom. While reciting prayers they pass twisted thread seven times round the bride's and bridegroom's chairs. When this is over the bride and bridegroom are shown a small basin containing clarified butter and molasses, one of the priests drops benjamin on a fire censer, and the bride and bridegroom throw rice over each other. Whoever is quickest in throwing the rice is supposed to be likely to rule. The guests closely watch their movements and reward their sharpness by laughter and applause. When the rice-throwing is over the bride and bridegroom are set side by side, two priests stand before them with a witness on each side holding brass plates full of rice. The two priests pronounce the marriage blessing in old Persian and Sanskrit, at each sentence throwing rice on the bride's and the bridegroom's heads.¹ At intervals in the midst of the blessing the ¹ The words of the marriage prayer are: In the Name of God. May the Creator Ahuramazd give you many children, with male grandchildren, much food, friends with heartpleasing body and face, walking through a long life for a hundred and fifty years. On the day N.N., in the month N.N., in the year N.N., since the king of kings the ruler Yazdehazard of the stock of Sāsān, a congregation is come together in the circle of the fortunate town N.N., according to the law and custom of the good Mazdayacnian religion, to give this maiden to a husband. This maiden, this woman, N.N., by name, accordlog to the contract of two thousand Nisaporian gold dinars.

Do you join with your relations in agreement for this marriage, with honourable mind, with the three words, to promote their own good deed for the bellowing N.N. this contract for life? Do you both accept the ocontract for life with a fair mind that to both of you pleasure may increase?

In the name and friendship of Ahuramazd. Be ever shining, ever increasing, ever victorious. Learn purity. Be worthy of praise. May the mind think good thoughts, the tongue speak good words, the works be good. May wicked thoughts hasto away, wicked words be lessened, wicked works be burnt. Be purity praised and sorcery scared. Be a Mazdayacnian. Accomplish works according to thy mind. Win for thyself property by right-dealing. Speak truth with the rulers and be obedient. Be modest with friends clever and well-wishing. Be not cruel. Be not wrathful. Commit no sin through shame. Be not covetous. Torment not. Cherish not envy; be not haughty; treat no one spitefully; cherish no lust. Rob not the property of others; keep thyself from the wives of others. Do good works with good energy. Impart to the Yazatās and the faithful (of thiao own). Enter into no strife with a revengeful man. Be no companion to the covetous. Go not in the same way with the cruel. Enter into no agreement with one of illfame. Enter into no work with the anskilful. Combat adversaries with right. Go with friends as is agreeable to friends. Enter into no strifo with those of evil repute. Before an assembly speak only pure words. Before kings speak with moderation. From ancestors inherit a good name. In nowise displease thy mother. Keep the body pure in justice.

Be of immortal body like Kai-Khosru. Be of understanding like Kāns. Be shining as the Sun. Be pure as the Moon. Be renowned as Zarthost. Be powerful as Rustam. Be fruitful as the earth. Let your friendship with friends brothers wife and children be as the union of body and soul. Keep always the right faith and a good character. Recognise Ahuramazd as ruler and Zarthost as lord, and put an end to Ahrimān and the evil spirits.

May Ahuramazd send you gifts, Bahman thought, Ardibehist speech, Sharovar works, Spendarmad wisdom, Khordād sweetness and fatness, Amerdād fruitfulness. May Ahuramazd bestow gifts on you, Adar brightness, Ardvishra purity, the Sun rule, the Moon increase, Tir liberality, Gosh temperance. May Ahuramazd give you gifts, Mithra bridegroom and bride are asked in Persian, Have you chosen her? and Have you chosen him? They answer in Persian or if they are too young their mothers answer for them 'I have chosen.' When the marriage blessing is over the bride's sister under the pretext of washing the bridegroom's feet with milk, steals one of his shoes and does not let it go till she is given a rupee. The bridegroom, leaving the bride at her father's house, starts for his own house with his friends and a bright array of torches. A feast is given at both houses and about midnight the bridegroom goes back to the bride's with some friends. The whole marriage ceremony described above is repeated. When this is over the bridegroom's and bride's robes are knotted together and the whole party returns with them to the bridegroom's.¹ The bride and bridegroom are made to feed each other from a dish of rice curds and sugar called dahi kumlo literally curds, and they hunt for a ring which each in turn hides in the dish and then gamble to show who is quicker and luckier. On the marriage evening friends and relations present shawls and rupees to the parents of the bridegroom and bride. The presents are carefully noted that on like occasions suitable return presents may be made. On the eighth morning after the wedding the wife goes to her parents' house and returns in the evening with a large vessel filled with wheat having its mouth covered with silk. From both houses sweet-bread and other choice

Section VIII.

Parsis.

CUSTOMS.

Marriage.

fortune, Frosh obedience, Rash conduct, Farvardin strength, Bohram victory, Ram joy, Bad might, May Ahuramazd bestow gifts on you, Din wisdom and majesty, Arshesangmad skill, Astat virtue, Asman activity, Zamiad firmness, Mahrespant forethought, Aneran beauty of body.

Good art thou : mayest thou maintain that which is better for thee than the good, since thou fittest thyself worthily as a Zaota (performer of religious ceremonies). Mayest thou receive the reward which is earned by the Zaota as one who thinks speaks and does good.

May that come to you which is better than the good ; may that not come to you which is worse than the evil ; may that not come to me which is worse than the evil. So may it happen as I pray. Spiegel's Avesta, 173 - 175.

¹ The girl's portion of the presents is sent with her either at this timoor or four days before or on the morning of the marriage day. The girl's portion includes a bedstead, a box or press, a cane basket, cooking and water vessels filled with wheat or rice, a pot of raw sugar, a tray of sugareakes, a thin green bamboo, and a suit of clothes for the boy and his relations, the whole worth Rs. 150 to Rs. 500 or more. During the first year after the betrothal on twenty-one occasions presents are sent to the girl's house by the boy's parents and on five occasions presents are sent to the boy's house by the girl's parents. The twenty-one occasions on which presents are sent to the girl's house by the boy's parents are, on the betrothal day when returning the horoscope ; on the Adarni or the fifth day preceding the marriage day ; on the Varui or the fourth day preceding the marriage day ; on the Navroz or initiation ; on the evening of the marriage day ; on the midnight of the marriage day ; on the Varovâr or eighth day after the marriage ; on the husband's birthday ; on the first new-moon day ; on Jamshedi Navroz ; on Meher Jasan ; on Abân Jasan ; on Adar Jasan ; on Bahman Jasan ; on Zoroaster's anniversary ; on Navroz the last day of the year ; on Khordadai ; on Holi ; on Cocanut Day ; on Dastara ; and on Devall.

The five occasions on which presents of clothes are sent to the boy's house by the girl's parents are, the Navroz ; the Adarni ; the evening of the marriage day ; the Navroz the last day of the year ; and the husband's birthday. All the presents made to the wife are returned to the husband if she dies before him, and remain with the wife if the husband dies before her. During the lifetime of husband and wife all presents, either of clothes or ornaments, made to the wife at the time of her marriage or on the occasions above mentioned, though at her disposal for use on other subsequent festive occasions, remain in the custody of her parents so long as the parents are alive.

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Marriage.

dishes are taken to the sea or to a river side and offered to the water spirits. In the evening at both houses relations and friends are feasted. On the first Behrám that is the twentieth day of the month after the wedding, friends and relations are called to a feast. No chairs or tables are used at wedding feasts. A strip of cloth half a yard wide is spread on the ground and the guests take their places in a row. The women and children dine first and when they have dined the men are called. Before each guest a piece of plantain or other leaf is spread, and, on the leaf, the servants lay a portion of each course. When all the courses are served the guests begin to eat. While the male guests are eating, small copper cups of the size of wine glasses are filled with mowra Bassia latifolia liquor and the toast 'Glory to God' is drunk. As soon as this toast is drunk the cups are refilled and four more toasts, 'The Bride and Bridegroom' 'The Fire Temple' 'The Host' and 'The Guests' generally follow. What with presents of dresses and ornaments, with feasting and other charges, the poorest Pársi can hardly marry his son for less than Rs. 400 or his daughter for less than Rs. 250. A middle class marriage costs Rs. 800 to Rs. 1200 and a rich marriage Rs. 1500 to Rs. 4000.¹

Polygamy Prohibited,
A.D. 1865.

Among Pársis polygamy is forbidden. The authority of religion and custom which was against polygamy was often set aside till polygamy was made illegal under the Pársi Marriage and Divorce Act (XXV.) of 1865. When a wife or a husband dies remarriage is allowed and practised. The marriage of a bachelor and a maid and the marriage of a widower and a maid are called Sháházan or royal marriage; the remarriage of a widow, whether she marries a bachelor or a widower, is called Chakárzan marriage or Nantra.² A widow's marriage differs from a maiden's marriage in the following particulars. The ceremony is performed once not twice and at midnight instead of in the evening. During the ceremony the bride should be helped by a remarried widow and not by a virgin or an unwidowed woman. The sari or robe which the bride wore during the ceremony is washed as soon as the ceremony is over, as it is unlucky for any one to use it before it is washed; while the blessings are being repeated the rice is thrown from below instead of from above as in the royal or maiden's wedding. The dress to be presented to the bride is not taken in a salver as in a maiden's wedding but in a deep basin, so that it may not be seen. When a bachelor marries a widow, on the evening before the wedding he is married with Sháházan or royal rites to a twig of the samri Prosopis spicigera, tree and at midnight is married to the widow with the second marriage rites. No children of the remarrying pair may be present during the remarriage ceremony, as it is believed that if any are present disagreements will arise between the children and the stepfather or stepmother.¹

¹ The chief details are: Dress Rs. 200 to Rs. 300, ornaments Rs. 500 to Rs. 2000, and feasting Rs. 700 to Rs. 1000.

² These are the only two forms of marriage at present in use among Gujarát Pársis. From the Ravayets or Precepts, of which an account is given under Religion (Above page 212) it seems that in earlier times there were five forms of marriage: (1) Pádsházan, the royal wedding the same as Sháházan, that is the first marriage of a boy and girl. It is recognised in both worlds. The merit of good deeds performed by a child born of this marriage redound to the parents. (2) Yukzan. If a man has a daughter and no son the marriage of the daughter is called Yukzan, because her son will be adopted by her father and made his heir. (3) Chakárzan or the marriage of a widow with a widower. (4) Setarzan. If an unmarried boy dies a girl is at once united to him as his wife and their names are pronounced together as husband and wife in the boy's funeral service. The girl can remarry but only in the widow-marriage form. (5) Khudash-rae-zan literally girl's choice is a marriage made not by the parents but by the girl's choice. The Ravayets or Precepts order the high priest to unite such a pair even though the parents object. After the birth of a child from this union a second marriage ceremony should be performed. The second ceremony is given the rank of Sháházan or Pádsházan that is of a first marriage.

When life has gone the body is washed, carried to the ground floor of the house, dressed, wrapped in old freshly-washed white cotton cloth, and laid in a corner of the front hall either full length or with the legs crossed. When the floor of the hall is of earth the spot on which the body is to be laid is marked off by drawing a line round it. The surface of the enclosed space is broken and on it the body is laid. If the floor is of cement or of stone the body is laid on one or two stone slabs which are set on the floor, and the ground covered by the slabs is marked off by a line drawn with an iron nail. A wooden floor, either plain or covered with stone slabs is never used for laying out the dead. The body is laid north and south with the feet towards the north. A lamp fed with clarified butter is kept burning at the head and a priest repeats prayers and burns sandalwood and benjamin in a censer in front of the body. Except when a death happens at night the body should be carried to the Tower of Silence as soon as possible after death. The bier-bearers must always be Pársis. They are known as *Nasesálar*² and are paid and set apart as body-carriers by the Pársi Pancháyet or local board. When the Tower of Silence is at a distance, the body is sometimes carried in a bullock cart, which is immediately after broken to pieces and buried near the Tower. When a body is carried on men's shoulders the number of bearers must not be less than four in the case of an adult or two in the case of a child. When the body is taken in a cart the number of bearers must be not less than two. In places within easy distance of a Tower of Silence, the bearers bring an iron

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Marriage.

Death.

¹ Most of the particulars in which widow-marriage ceremonies differ from the ceremonies in a marriage between a bachelor and a maid seem traceable to the fear of the spirit of the first husband which is strong among all classes of Hindus. Details are given in the Sholápur Gazetteer, XX. 524-527.

² The Nasesálar are always laymen. The priestly class is entirely free from the duty of carrying the dead. Poor and destitute laymen become body-carriers. Washing the dead, carrying them to the Tower of Silence, and keeping the Tower in order, Pársis consider defiling duties. After he touches a dead body until he has been purified the body-carrier remains aloof and is not allowed to touch anything or anybody. After he has purified himself by rubbing himself with cow's urine and washing with water the Nasesálar mixes freely with other Pársis except that at public dinners they eat by themselves at a distance from the rest. The office is not hereditary. Bearers were formerly paid by the mourning family. Now they receive fixed monthly wages, and are servants of the Pársi local boards who distribute them according as their services are required. When carrying the dead the Nasesálar are dressed in white, and they either wear gloves and stockings or wrap linen round their hands and feet. Their every-day dress is like that of other laymen, except that they are not allowed to shave either the head or the face. Before he becomes a body-carrier a Nasesálar goes through the Baránum cleansing ceremony.

Section VIII.

Pársis.

CUSTOMS.

Death.

bier and lay it near the body. The bier is a plain iron bedstead without the canopy, standing about six inches from the ground and with two long side-rods to rest on the bearers' shoulders. The women of the family and their friends sit on carpets within doors a little way from the body wailing and crying. The men and their friends sit outside and in the streets in long rows on benches or on carpets. A number of priests attend and say the prayers for the dead. Two of them, chosen for the occasion, stand at the threshold opposite the body and the bier, and begin reciting the Ahunvat Gátha a portion of the Yasna which is called Gehsárná. In the midst of the recitation the two priests turn round, the attendants lay the body on the bier, and a dog is brought to look on the face of the dead and drive away evil spirits. Then the two priests again turn towards the body and recite. When the reciting is over the priests leave the door, and the wailing and crying which has ceased for the time begins afresh. The male friends of the dead go to the door, bow, and in token of respect for the dead raise their two hands from the floor to their heads. After the body is laid on the bier it is covered with a sheet from head to foot. The two attendants bring the bier out of the house, holding it low in their hands, and make it over to four more bearers outside, who like the two attendants are dressed in freshly-washed white clothes. All the men present stand while the body is taken from the house and bow to it as it passes. The body is carried feet foremost, and after the body follow priests in their white dress, and after the priests the friends of the dead. All walk in couples, each couple holding the ends of a handkerchief. At the Tower of Silence, which is generally some way from the town, the bier is set down at a little distance from the door. When all have again bowed to the dead, the bier is taken by the bearers into the Tower where the body is lifted from the bier and laid on the inner terrace of the Tower.¹ The clothes

¹ The Pársis call the Tower of Silence Dokhma a Zend word meaning tomb. Before the foundations of a Tower of Silence are laid a circle representing the outside wall of the Tower is marked on the ground and in the centre a deep pit is dug. This when lined with masonry becomes the central pit bandar of the Tower. All along the circumference a ditch is dug wide enough to hold the foundation of the Tower wall. Then at each of the four corners, in the south-east south-west north-west and north-east a ditch is dug connecting the central pit and the circumference. On the day fixed for laying the foundation a large number of people meet. Two specially purified priests go into the central pit and drive a long iron nail into the bottom of the pit and afterwards drive a similar iron nail at the south-east south-west north-west and north-east points of the circumference. In the part of the circumference between each of these four corner points the priests drive in quincunx order two rows of smaller nails, five nails in the inner and four nails in the outer row. Along each side of the four ditches which join the central pit with the circumference, they fix thirty-two nails, and drive a nail at the end of the connecting ditches nearest to the central pit. In all three hundred and one nails are driven into the ground. A long piece of yarn prepared by twisting together a hundred-and-one threads is first passed by the two priests through a hole in the big nail at the south-east and to this nail one end of the threads is tied. The priests then draw the thread south out and in along the nine nails up to the big nail at the south-west corner, then along the nine nails up to the big nail at the north-west corner, then along the nine nails to the big nail at the north-east corner, and so along the last nine nails back to the big nail at the south-east corner. A second round is repeated in the same order. In the third round the priests again start from the south-east nail but first go along thirty-two nails on either side of the first connecting ditch and the nail at the top of it; then to the nine nails at the south up to the big south-west nail and along the thirty-two nails on either side of the second connecting ditch and the nail at the top are torn off and the body is left to the vultures. After the body is laid in the Tower, before they return to their homes each of the funeral party has a little cow's urine poured into the palm of his left hand and recites the Nerang prayer. They wash their face hands and feet at a well near the Tower, and repeat the kusti prayer. They then go home. On reaching home they do not enter the house till they have again washed their face hands and feet and again repeated the kusti prayer. They then enter the house and at once bathe and change their clothes. Men who have been at a funeral cannot eat work or mix with their friends till they have bathed, and their clothes must be washed before they are again used. When a married man dies his widow at once breaks her glass bangles and in their stead wears gold or silver bracelets. While she remains a widow, that is until she remarries, a widow does not take part in any ceremonies connected with joyful occasions. Every morning for three days after a death rice is cooked and laid in the veranda for dogs to eat. The place in the house where the body was laid is nailed off and is not used for one month if the death occurs

Section VIII.

PÁRSIS.

CUSTOMS.

Death.

of it; then along the nine rails at the west up to the big north-west nail and along the rails on either side of the third connecting ditch and the nail at the top of it, and then along the nine rails at the north up to the big north-east nail and along the thirty-two rails on either side of the fourth ditch and the nail at the top of it; then along the nine rails at the east and back to the big south-east nail. After going round this nail the thread is carried to the big nail in the centre of the pit, and all that remains of the yarn is wound round it. This ends the foundation ceremony. During the whole process of fixing the rails and passing the yarn along them the two priests continue to recite sacred texts. A diagram is attached showing the position of the 391 nails. The central pit which is about 150 feet in circumference is lined with masonry to a depth of six to eight feet. The space round the pit is filled to the level of the pit mouth. This platform is paved with stone slabs which converge from the circumference to the centre leaving narrow spaces for the liquid matter to drain to the centre. Round the outer edge a wall built inside of the tower forms a ledge. Dead bodies are laid upon the stone platform which is about 500 feet in circumference and divided into three concentric rows, the outermost for men, the next one for women, and the innermost for children. After the flesh is eaten by the vultures the dry bones are thrown into the central pit which is connected by underground passages with four wells built at some distance from the tower. At a short distance beyond these wells, fronting the entrance of the tower, is a vaulted building in which a lamp is kept burning at night whose rays pass into the tower through holes in the iron door. After the tower is finished the whole of its inside is first washed with cow's urine. After it is dry it is washed with water. Then for three days the Yasna and for three nights the Varahdada are recited by the priests in the tower. On the fourth day it is formally opened with a Yasna ceremony. Now the tower is closed to all but Pársis and is fit to receive the dead. After the first dead is deposited in it, it is closed even to Pársis except to the corpse-bearers or Naresdars. A diagram is attached showing the inner arrangement of a tower. Pársis from all parts crowd to the place to witness the ceremony of opening a new Tower of Silence. The belief is general that to see the foundation and tower-opening ceremonies cleanses from sin and that any one who has seen seven tower ceremonies goes to heaven. The Pársis are very careful regarding the first body that is laid in a new Tower of Silence. On no account may the first tenant of the Tower be a young person. If the first body exposed is a young person many Pársis, boys and girls will die. The first body laid in a new tower should be an old person, because, it is said, death has few terrors for the aged. The next best corpse with which to open a tower is the body of an infant, because in that case life has scarcely begun. Another belief about children is that the mother of the child whose body is first laid in a new tower never after remains barren. After a tower is finished and until it is used the top of it is fully covered with dead animal or other unclean things may fall into it.

Section VIII.

PÁRSIS.

CUSTOMS.

Death.

between the eighth and the twelfth month of the year and for ten days if the death occurs between the first and the seventh month.¹ During the time the place is thus set apart a lamp is kept burning on it and a jar filled with water and with flowers in its mouth is set where the head of the deceased lay.

About three in the afternoon of the third day after death a meeting is held in the house of mourning. The guests seat themselves on benches chairs and carpets, and recite prayers of repentance on behalf of the dead. While the guests are praying, two priests if the dead was married and one priest if the dead was unmarried, lay several trays of flowers and one or two censers or incense-burners in front of the spot where the body was laid, or in the hall of the fire-temple, and, standing opposite the censer and flowers, recite prayers. When the prayers are over, the son or the adopted son of the deceased bows before the high priest, who makes him promise to perform all religious rites for the dead.² The friends of the deceased then read a list of charitable contributions in memory of the dead. This ceremony is called Uthamna Rising from mourning. The flowers in the trays are handed round and the people are sprinkled with rosewater and retire. To the priests and the poor the rich distribute alms and sacred shirts. Next morning before dawn, white clothes, cooking and drinking vessels, fruit and wheat cakes called darun are consecrated to the dead in the fire-temple. A suit of clothes and a set of vessels are given to the family priest. The rest are used by the family and the fruit and cakes are eaten. After this is over, about four in the morning the grief-raising ceremony is repeated. For three days after a death except for dogs no food should be cooked in the house of mourning. What food is required is as a rule sent cooked by near relations. During the three first days of mourning no relation of the dead, wherever he may be, eats flesh. For the first ten days and sometimes longer, female friends and relations come to the house of mourning and are received in the hall by the women of the house, and remain there from morning to noon. Similarly kinsmen and friends call at the house for a few minutes in the morning and evening for the first three days. They are received by the men of ¹ The proper reason why the spot where the dead lay is so much longer unclean, that is haunted, during the latter part of the year than during the earlier months is that during the southing of the sun the great spirit-scarer, as his scaring power grows less the power of the spirits increases and the dead refuses to leave his old home. Hindus preserve the same belief by saying that during the later or southing months heaven's gates are closed and the dead cannot get in. But according to the Párisi scriptures the soul departs from this world on the dawn of the fourth day. The ground remains unclean because of the 'Daruze nasas' the evil spirit that haunts burial-grounds or grounds where a corpse has lain, or in other words, the contamination of the earth and the air caused by a corpse. This 'Daruze' is scared away by the spirit-scarer ann, or the contamination is removed by the drying power of the sun. This power is weaker during the southing of the sun, or during the later part of the year than during the earlier months, and hence the ground is considered as remaining unclean longer in the former than in the latter case.

² Párisi believe that a man cannot be saved unless he has a son. If he has no son a Párisi must adopt one of his blood relations, or failing that a distant relation, or failing that any Zoroastrian. The adoption must be declared at the uthamna or third day ceremony.

the house and seated in the veranda or near the veranda on carpets benches or chairs. At morning, noon, evening, midnight and at four in the morning priests are engaged to recite prayers during the three first days. On the fourth day a feast is held especially for priests, and friends are also asked to join in it. A little of the food cooked on this day is sent to all relations and friends who make a point of eating or at least of tasting it. On the tenth and the thirtieth day after death, the death-day in each month for the first year and every yearly death-day ceremonies in honour of the dead are performed.

Section VIII.Pārsis.Customs.Death.

SECTION IX.—COMMUNITY.

Section IX.

PÁRSIS.

COMMUNITY.

TILL A.D. 1865 in all parts of Gujarát, and still in parts of the province which belong to the Gáokwár, local councils called anjumáns or pancháyets settled all Pársi social and religious disputes. In A.D. 1855 the spread of European ideas and the decline of the power of the leading families among the Bombay Pársis resulted in the formation of a Pársi Law Association. After ten years, as the representations of this body seemed to express the wish of the more powerful and intelligent section of the community, Government passed two Acts, the Pársi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1865 and the Pársi Succession Act of 1865, defining amending and making conformable to Pársi customs the law relating to Pársi marriage, divorce, and succession. Since 1865 the Pársi communities in Imperial Gujarát bring all disputes regarding marriage and succession to the regular law courts, where, in accordance with the procedure provided under these Pársi marriage and succession acts, the Judge is aided by Pársi delegates nominated by Government after consulting the leaders of the local community. In the Pársi settlements within the limits of the Gáokwár's territory, disputes regarding marriage are still settled by the local councils. In Navsári, which is the earliest and one of the most important Pársi settlements, the council or anjumán is composed of the high priest dastur, and the leading priestly family of the desáís as chief members, and the representatives of some other priestly families as members. If the matter in dispute touches the excommunication of a member of the community or some other point of public importance, the meetings are attended by all adult male Pársis. Meetings to allow remarriage, to hear complaints of priestly irregularities, and other matters of less importance are attended only by the leading members. The local council of Navsári has the special power of forbidding the marriage of a widow or a widower unless the council is satisfied that all claims for ornaments or clothes brought by the relations of the former wife or husband have been settled. In Navsári and other Pársi settlements in Gáokwár territory the local council anjumán regulates the succession to property and in disputed cases decides who shall be declared the adopted son. In marriage disputes it tries to effect a friendly settlement of quarrels between husbands and wives and exercises a check on bigamy. The council has not power to annul a marriage with a second wife during the lifetime of a former wife, but, on pain of being cut off from all social and priestly rites and from the use of the fire-temple during his life and of the Tower of Silence after his death, they can force the bigamous husband to provide a maintenance for his first wife. Since the passing of the Pársi Marriage and Succession Acts of 1865 none of these powers have been exercised by placed in an urn. On the first of the five Gatha or Hymn Days, which are the five extra days at the end of the year, the sixteen fires are taken out of the sixteen urns and in the order in which they were purified are placed in the one urn which is to hold the Behráw fire. During the thirty days of the first following month daily prayers are chanted over the urn with the fires. At the end of the thirty days the united fires have become a Behráw fire. When the fire is ready the vaulted central fire room is purified, and on some lucky day, generally a day sacred to fire, with a procession of priests holding maces and swords, the urn with the sacred fire under a silver canopy is brought in procession and set on a stool in the second room. A sword and two maces are hung on the walls, and at each corner of the room from a bright chain hangs a brass bell which the priest rings at each watch or geh when he performs a ceremony near the fire.¹ Amid prayers followed by feasting and rejoicing the Behráw fire is declared ready to be worshipped.

Religious Pársis visit the fire templo almost daily, and on four days in each month, the 3rd 9th 17th and 20th, which are sacred to fire, almost all Pársis go and offer prayers. Men and women come to the same part of the temple and worship the fire in the same way. On reaching the fire temple the worshipper washes his face hands and feet and recites the kusti or sacred-cord prayer. Then carrying a piece of sandalwood and some money for the officiating priest, he passes through the outer hall. On entering the inner hall on which a carpet is spread he takes off his shoes and goes to the threshold of the central fire room, kneels, and again standing begins to recite prayers. The worshipper is not allowed to pass the threshold of the fire room; the priest alone is allowed to enter. Soon after the worshipper reaches the threshold one of the priests brings the worshipper ashes from the urn in a silver or copper-brass ladle. The worshipper takes a pinch of the ashes and applies them to his forehead and eyelashes and hands the priest the money and sandalwood. When his prayers are over the worshipper walks backwards to where he left his shoes and goes home.²

Besides fire the objects of Zoroastrian veneration include six Amshaspánds that is the Immortal Furtherers and twenty-three *Yazads*³ or Worshipfuls. Ahuramazd ordered his name to be included among the Amshaspánds, on which account in the Pársi scriptures they are known as Hafta Amshaspánds, that is the Seven Amsháspands. The Holy Furtherers and the Worshipfuls are believed to preside over different objects and parts of the universe. Seven of the thirty days of each month are named after Ahuramazd and the six Immortal Furtherers, the remaining twenty days after the first twenty Yazads or Worshipfuls, and the names of the eighth fifteenth and twenty-third

Section VI.

Pársis.

RELIGION.

Temples.Sacred Fires.The ChiefTemple.Atesh Behram.

*Objects of Veneration.
Amshaspánds
and Yazads.*

¹ At each watch, besides ringing the bell, the priest cleans the room, washes the footstool, arranges the cinders, and puts fresh sandal or other wood on the fire, all the while reciting the prayer in praise of the fire.

² The Pársis have (A.D. 1893) eight Atesh Behráms and 133 Agáris. Details are given in Appendix I. page 247.

³ The Zend word yazad means worthy of worship. In the later Pehlvi writings the name yazdan derived from 'yazad' is applied to the Almighty.

APPENDIX I.

FIRE-TEMPLES THROUGHOUT INDIA.

ATESH BEHRAMS.

No.	Place	Founder	Date	Remarks
			A.D.
1	Pestunji	1000 by Nussuraji	20th Sept. 1782	Consolidated according to Kadmal rules.
2	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	15th Nov. 1829	Consolidated according to Kadmal rules.
3	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	15th Dec. 1847	Consolidated according to Kadmal rules.
4	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	17th Oct. 1847	Rebuilt.
5	Nasirabad	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	2nd Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
6	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Nov. 1847	Rebuilt.
7	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
8	Pestunji	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.

Appendix I.

ATESH
BEHRAMS.

AGIYAS.

AGIYAS.

1	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	20th Oct. 1847	Rebuilt.
2	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	15th Jan. 1848	Rebuilt.
3	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th May 1847	Rebuilt.
4	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Nov. 1847	Rebuilt.
5	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	20th Oct. 1847	Rebuilt.
6	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
7	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
8	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
9	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
10	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
11	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
12	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.
13	Aden	Rebuilt by the late Behramji Bhoraji Wadia.	10th Dec. 1847	Rebuilt.

Appendix I.

AGARAS.

FILE-TEMPLES THROUGHOUT INDIA—continued.

No.	Place.	Founder.	Date.	Remarks.
			A.D.
14	Baroda Camp ..	Biranjil Nusserwanji ..	10th Nov 1908
15	Belgaum	Pestonji Cursetji Barot.	6th Dec. 1891.
16	Bhagra near Surat ..	Janisetji Sorabji Bhagvagar.	25th May 1859
17	Bhātha ditto ..	Pestonji Virjibhoj ..	3rd Dec. 1861	Re-built by Sorabji and Nowroji Framji Misry, 9th Mar. 1861
18	Bhuvanagar	Darabji Shapurji Umriker.	12th May 1891
19	Bluesān near Surat	Dadabhoj and Muncherji Pestonji Wadia.	6th Feb. 1846	Re-built by Babubhai Sorabji Framji Wadia 6th June 1877.
20	Bilmora	Nowroji Janisetji Wadia.	18th July 1828.
21	Bombay, Daħarkote.	Sorabji Manockji Sethi.	21th Nov. 1793.	Re-built by his heirs. 14th Nov. 1822 & 2nd Oct. 1826.
22	Ditto ditto ...	Shapurji Sorabji Kapavalla.	10th Nov. 1837
23	Ditto Bādra..	Nusserwanji Ruttonji Tata.	6th Mar. 1821
24	Ditto Bhondj Bādr	Nusserwanji Hirjibhoj Curman.	16th Mar. 1847.
25	Ditto ditto ...	Bamanji Merwanji Nevavalla.	11th Jan. 1851
26	Ditto ditto ...	Merwanji Manockji Patel.	23rd Sept. 1808	Re-built by his grand daughter Dabhai Nusserwanji Felt, 8th June 1878.
27	Ditto Chaupati.	Sorabji Vachaghandy..	8th Feb. 1818.
28	Ditto ditto ...	Chavabai, widow of Sorabji Cursetji Thodis.	29th May 1838.
29	Ditto Chandanvād.	Hoimasji Bomanji Wadia.	26th Nov. 1804.
30	Ditto ditto ...	Avabai Ardesir Cursetji Wadia.	15th Apr. 1803
31	Ditto ditto ...	Subscription	21st Aug. 1857.	For the use of the Bhagatio priests of Navsari.
32	Ditto Colaba...	Jijibhai Dadaabhai ..	18th Mar. 1870
33	Ditto ditto ..	Merwanji Framji Panday.	4th Dec 1865.
34	Ditto Duncan Road.	Hoimasji Dhunji Patel	14th Feb. 1831
35	Ditto Fort ..	Banoji Limji ..	25th June 1790.	Re-built by his family, 15th Apr 1815.
36	Ditto ditto ...	Manockji Nowroji Sethi	19th June 1738.	Re-built by his brother Dabhoj Ardesir Sethi, 5th Nov. 1881.
37	Ditto ditto ...	Cursetji Manockji Shroff.	29th Nov. 1816	The fire of this temple was first consecrated at Chaupati by Cursetji's father Manockjee Darabji Shroff on 5th Dec. 1790.
38	Ditto ditto ...	Ardesir Dadybhoj ..	25th Sept. 1803.
39	Ditto ditto ...	Subscription	2nd Feb. 1820.	Re-built by Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai's sons on the 12th April 1870 This is especially built for Gaurvada priests
40	Ditto ditto ...	Muncherji Lungda.	9th April 1815.	Re-built by Pestonji Nusserwanji Godiwalla on 23rd April 1825.

FIRE-TEMPLES THROUGHOUT INDIA—continued.

Appendix I.
AGRIAS.

No	PLACE.	FOUNDERS.	DATE.	REMARKS
			A.D.
41	Bombay, Fort ...	Motihaji Jehangir Wadia.	10th June 1665.
42	Ditto ditto ...	Phoyabai, widow of Dadabhai Maneckji Vacha.	19th May 1891.
43	Ditto Govalla Tank.	Soonaji Hirji Ready money.	13th Sept. 1842.	Originally built as a small scale by Dorabji Hormusji Ranji about 1812.
44	Ditto Grant Road.	Ashaji Bhaccaji .	12th Sept. 1846.	Re-built by Jehangir Bezonji Vakil, 17th Sept. 1865.
45	Ditto ditto ..	Sorabji Hormusji Ranji	22nd April 1869.
46	Ditto Khetwadi	Cawasji Manekji Ashburner	7th May 1892...
47	Ditto ditto ..	Pallanji Cursetji Cama	5th June 1869
48	Ditto Mahalaxmi	Hormusji Dadabhai Sawyer.	13th Mar. 1848.
49	Ditto Marine Lines,	Jamsetji Dadabhai America	17th Nov. 1874.	Adedhi consecrated on 6th Nov 1851.
50	Ditto Mazagon ...	Framji Nusserwanji Estell.	7th Nov. 1845
51	Ditto ditto	Ruttonbhai Cowasji Jehangir.	4th May 1867.
52	Ditto ditto ..	Bhramji Nasservanji Sirval.	3rd Feb. 1870.
53	Ditto Mount Road	Nowroji Cawasji Nariswalla.	3rd July 1822
54	Ditto Parcel .	Dadabhai & Muncherji Pestonji Wadia.	16th Aug. 1891	Re-built by Muncherji Jamserji's sons, 9th Aug. 1865.
55	Ditto ditto ..	Dinbhai Nusserwanji Petit.	16th Mar. 1891
56	Ditto Tordeo ..	Chadanbhai Byramji Bathwalla.	10th Jan. 1865.
57	Broach, Baharkote.	Rustomji Manekji Hiravala.	1727.
58	Ditto ditto ...	Dastoor Kamdin Fardunji	1777.
59	Ditto Fort ..	Homaji Dorabji ..	16th Feb. 1760	New fire consecrated 30th Jan 1891. Re built 9th Nov. 1897.
60	Ditto ditto ..	Subscription through Miraji Oskaji.	27th Feb. 1855
61	Ditto ditto ..	Sorabji Dhunibhai Khambatta.	27th Oct. 1857.
62	Ditto ditto ...	Sorabji Hormusji Valharis.	18th Mar. 1891
63	Ditto ditto ..	Shapurji Sorabji Nariswala's family.	4th June 1890
64	Ditto Kharadwad	Hirabai Nowroji Nariswalla.	7th June 1891.
65	Calcutta ...	Rustomji Cawasji Banaji.	16th Sept 1839
66	Cambay ...	Pestonji Cursetji Moti	13th Jan 1844
67	Chikli ...	Dorabji and Framji Hormusji Guadar.	6th Mar. 1873.
68	Daman ...	Mervanji Nowroji Jooji Francis.	1820	Re-built by the same gentleman 6th Mar. 1849
69	Ditto ...	Ruttonbhai Hormusji Muncherji Cama	1846.
70	Devlar ...	Narvazbai Nusserwanji Fakuji.	26th May 1855
71	Diu ...	Jehangir Nusserwanji Wadi.	24th Feb. 1830
72	Dumas near Surat .	Subscription ...	24th Mar. 1839
73	Gandavi ...	Hormusji Bhaccaji Chitoy.	4th June 1834
74	Igatpuri ...	Subscription ...	19th June 1887
75	Ilav ...	Jamsetji Burjerji Mistry.	27th Dec. 1869
76	Indore ..	Hormusji Manekji Bhambhani.	28th April 1879

Appendix I.
AGILNIS.

FIRE-TEMPLES THROUGHOUT INDIA—continued.

No.	PLACE.	FOUNDOR.	DATE.	REMARKS.
			A.D.
77	Ichhapore near Surat.	Chiraji and Paltanji Dhanuji's Sons.	30th April 1947.
78	Jamnagar	Tohmaji Mahuraji Mr. 21.	16th Mar. 1895
79	Kalyan	Edulji Hyramji Mody.	1789 ..	Re-built by Bhicaji Jijibhai, Dadasaheb Hormusji, Fardunji, Merwanji and Hormusji Mahuraji on 11 Nov. 1860.
80	Karnachi	Mirji Jamssetji Bacheia	3rd May 1815
81	Ditto	Dasabhai Merwanji Wadia & Co.	28th May 1870
82	Karanj	Hormusji Shapurji Patalka's Sons	22nd Jan. 1846.
83	Khajol	Hyramji Hormji Colah	12th June 1846
84	Khargaum	Motibhai Boraonji Jamssetji Mulla.	21st May 1882.
85	Khandva	Hormusji Dhanjibhai Khandva	21st May 1893.
86	Kudlan near Surat.	Mancherji Chiraji and Harraaji Manockji.	1st Apr. 1850
87	Lahore	Ardehar Hyramji Libanalla.	29th July 1892
88	Mahava	Subscription	1st Jan 1878.
89	Mundrol near Surat	Ditto	4th Jan. 1860	Re-built by Bhikaji Sorabji Anderson, 29th Mar. 1891.
90	Medhat near Gandevi.	Ditto	21st Dec. 1883.
91	Mhow	Ditto	6th Mar. 1846.	Re-built 2nd Mar 1850 and again on 2nd Sept. 81.
92	Nagpore	Nusserwanji Manockji Mulla.	9th Nov. 1897.
93	Nagol	Nasabhai Nusserwanji Modi.	1765 ...	Fire consecrated 26th June 1862.
94	Nasari	Anjuman	Very old	Re built by Anjuman, 24th Feb 1868. Agni re built by Mancherji Cursetji Desai, 7th Feb 1797. And again by Motibhai Jhangir Wadia 20th May 1851.
95	Ditto	Minocher Homji ...	1656 ...	Re-built by Cursetji Ardeshir Dadasaheb, 10th May 1862.
96	Ditto	Sir Jamssetji Jijibhai	14th Mar. 1873
97	Ditto	Trustees of the Wadia Fire temple of Bombay.	24th Dec. 1887.
98	Neemuch	The heirs of Cursetji Jeevanji Merwanji.	18th Jan. 1869
99	Pardi in South Gujarat.	Hormusji Gadabhai ...	2nd June 1891.
100	Poon	Sorabji Dattaji Patel.	6th Aug. 1874.	Altar consecrated 16th June 1813; re-built 6th June 1877.
101	Ditto	Sir Jamssetji Jijibhai	29th Nov. 1844.
102	Ditto	Subscription	18th Oct. 1897.	Consecrated according to Kadmi rita.
103	Quetta	Subscription	2nd June 1883.
104	Rajkot	Ditto	21st May 1876.
105	Randir near Surat.	Dadasaheb Dorabji Randia.	14th June 1831.	Re-built by Dadasaheb Dorabji, 16th Nov. 1895.
106	Savarda	Cursetji Fardunji Porek and Manockji Dhanuji Patalka.	2nd July 1860.

APPENDIX II.

TOWERS OF SILENCE THROUGHOUT INDIA.

Appendix II.
TOWERS OF SILENCE.

No	PLACE.	FORWEN.	DATE.	REMARKS.
			A.O.
1	Abu	Subscription	10th Mar. 1859
2	Aden	Morwanji Sorabji Kharagat.	2nd Apr. 1847.
3	Ditto	Subscription	31st Aug. 1866.
4	Ahmedabad	Ditto	21st May 1843.
5	Ditto	Sir Jamsetji Jijibhoy..	17th May 1850	Built for bodies of Parsis not brought in by regular carriers.
6	Ahmadnagar	Cursetji Cowasji Sett ..	18th Nov. 1825.	Not in use.
7	Ditto	Subscription	Mar. 1827.	Ditto.
8	Ditto	11th Jan 1842.
9	Ditto	Khan Bahadur Padamji Pestonji and Khan Bahadur Nasserwanji Cursetji.	9th Mar. 1860.
10	Alora	Subscription	18th Feb. 1893.
11	Amore	Ditto	11th Mar. 1833.
12	Alpi on the Malabar Coast.	Nooraji Cowasji Narulwalla	1807	Not in use.
13	Anroli near Surat.	Subscription	23rd Mar. 1858
14	Amleswar near Broach.	Narsang Dhanpal of Hansot.	1500-1517 ..	Not in use.
15	Ditto	Pestonji Domanji Wadia.	24th Mar. 1810
16	Aurangabad ..	Vlecaji and Pestonji Merji.	11th Jan. 1813
17	Badnara in Madras.	Subscription	20th Mar. 1833.
18	Balapan in Berar ...	Vlecaji and Pestonji Merji	25th Apr. 1833.
19	Balsar ..	Subscription	1815	Not in use.
20	Ditto	Ditto	23rd Jan. 1777.
21	Ditto	Ditto	25th Dec. 1691.
22	Bardoli near Surat.	Ditto	27th Mar. 1847.
23	Baroda	Ditto	2nd June 1842.	For bodies not brought in by regular bearers.
24	Ditto	Sir Jamsetji Jijibhoy...	1850	Not in use.
25	Bilimora	Subscription	1842
26	Ditto	Rustomji Domanji Botchevala.	13th Dec. 1801
27	Ditto	Subscription	20th Mar. 1850
28	Bombay	Mody Mirji Vacha	1870.
29	Ditto	Manekji Nawroji Sett	1750.
30	Ditto	Subscription	7th May 1779.
31	Ditto	Manchherji Jivanji	9th Sept. 1790.	Built for his own use. His body was kept in a stone enclosure for a month and removed when the tower was ready.
32	Ditto	Dady Nasserwanji	22nd Apr. 1708	For the use of his own family.
33	Ditto	Framji Cowasji Domanji.	3rd May 1832...
34	Ditto	Cowasji Edulji Bhasny	7th May 1844
35	Borlgaum near Jah-Bordi.	Subscription	Not in use.
36	Broach	Ditto	Before 1500
37	Ditto	Pestonji Parsi	1509
38	Ditto	Subscription	1754	Not in use.

TOWERS OF SILENCE THROUGHOUT INDIA—continued.

Appendix II.

TOWERS OF SILENCE,

No.	Place.	Founder.	Date.	Remarks.
39	Broach ...	Subscription ...	A.D. 18th Dec. 1833.
40	Calcutta ...	Nowroji Sorabji Umri- gar.	26th Jan. 1822.
41	Cambay	Before 1500 ...	Brick ruin.
42	Ditto ...	Hirji Asa of Surat	1531.
43	Ditto ...	Pestonji Cursetji Mody	28th Apl. 1826
44	Chikil ...	Subscription ...	2nd Mar. 1874.
45	Daman	1585 ...	Not in use.
46	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	1700 ...	Unhewn stone.
47	Ditto ...	Jamsetji Byramji Las- kari.	12th May 1881
48	Deesa ...	Subscription
49	Deolali ...	Ki ramji Nanabhoi Al- tri.	22nd Sept 1809.
50	Devlar ...	Dorabji Furdouji Las- kari.	6th Jan. 1788...	Not in use, Thirty- six spaces.
51	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	16th Jan. 1839.
52	Diu ...	Jehangir Nusservanji Wadia.	10th Mar. 1839.
53	Ganderi ...	Subscription ...	22nd July 1723.	Not in use.
54	Ditto ...	Ditto ...	1790 ...	Ditto.
55	Ditto ...	Jamsetji Nanabhoi Gaz- dari.	21st Apl. 1817.
56	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	6th Apl. 1870.
57	Gudar near Jnh- Bord.	Ditto ...	1775 ...	Not in use.
58	Hyderabad (Dakhan)	Vicaji and Pestonji Merji.	10th Oct. 1839.
59	Igatpura ...	Subscription ...	31st May 1895.
60	Ilao ...	Ditto ...	1760.
61	Indore ...	Ditto ...	26th Feb. 1883.
62	Jalna ...	Ditto ...	1912	Not in use.
63	Ditto ...	Jamsetji Kazi ...	1824 ...	Ditto.
64	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	23rd Apl. 1871.
65	Kalyan	Before 1500 ...	Brick ruin.
66	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	1722 ...	Not in use.
67	Ditto ...	Nasabhai widow of Nusservanji Dadabhoi Modi.	1799.
68	Ditto ...	Nowroji Balabhoi ...	31st Mar. 1880
69	Karachi ...	Hormusji Dadabhoi Gadiali.	25th Jan. 1848
70	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	6th June 1875.
71	Karanj ...	Dumbhal widow of Poojaji Manaji.	24th Dec. 1828.
72	Khergaum Surat District.	Molubai widow of Bo- manji Jamsetji Moola	21st May 1882
73	Koonjiana 'ditto'.	Subscription ...	30th Nov. 1896.
74	Madras ...	Hijee Maneckjee Khara- of Joorg.	1796 ...	Never used owing to the belief that a Tower cannot be used until a dead child has been laid in it. Now (1896) used as a storehouse.
75	Mahava ...	Maneckji Jeenaji ...	6th May 1838.
76	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	30th Nov. 1890.
77	Mandvi ...	Ditto ...	3rd Jan. 1840.
78	Mhow ...	Subscription ...	17th May 1841	As their contribu- tion poor Parsis throw palm juice and eggs into the cement used for build- ing this Tower.
79	Nargol ...	Manoharji Kharshedji Sett.	1767.
80	Ditto ...	Subscription ...	29th May 1883.
81	Narsari	Before 1500 ...	A brick ruin.
82	Ditto ...	Maneck Changa ...	1831	Not in use.
83	Ditto ...	Maneckji Nowroji Sett.	30th Jan. 1747.
84	Ditto ...	Hormusji Manoharji Bhabha.	6th Mar. 1823.
85	Ditto ...	Nusservanji Ruttonji Tata.	8th Mar. 1878.
86	Neemuch ...	Subscription ...	27th Apr. 1877.

APPENDIX.

Appendix II.

TOWERS OF SILENCE.

TOWERS OF SILENCE THROUGHOUT INDIA—continued.

No.	PLAC.	FOUNDER.	DATE.	REMARKS.
87	Pardi in South Gujarāt.	Subscription . . .	A.D. 5th June 1891.
88	Poona ..	Sorabji Bhattarji Patel.	29th Apl. 1825
89	Ditto ..	Subscription ..	24th Apl. 1875.
90	Randir near Surat	Sorabji Maucherji Hejramony, Mirji Jeevanji Reahimony, and Rustonji Dada-bhai Naderah.	24th May 1787.
91	Ditto ..	Subscription ..	23rd Mar. 1852.
92	Sanjan in North Thar.	Before 1100.
93	Satara ..	Subscription ..	12th Apl. 1857.
94	Sangli Vira near Navsari.	6th Feb. 1862.
95	Sholapur ..	Vicaji and Pestonji Viji.	2nd Feb. 1813
96	Surat ..	Subscription ..	Before 1800.*
97	Ditto ..	Narabhai Poojla Modi.	1647.
98	Ditto ..	Subscription ..	1725.
99	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	1735.
100	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	1742.
101	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	23rd Dec. 1761.
102	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	10th June 1771.
103	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	24th Jan. 1827.
104	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	4th Feb. 1838.
105	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	3rd Apl. 1837.
106	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	12th Mar. 1859
107	Smayil ..	Rustonji Maneckji Luthi.	23rd Nov. 1801.	Ruined.*
108	Takapur ..	Subscription ..	1700.
109	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	1750.
110	Ditto ..	Ditto ..	16th Feb. 1860.
111	Taveri ..	Ditto ..	10th Apl. 1863.	A brick ruin.
112	Tena near Surat
113	Ditto
114	Ditto	Ruined.
115	Ditto	Half ruined.
116	Thana ..	Cawasji and Dorabji Rustonji Patel.	7th Apl 1760 ..	ruined.
117	Ditto ..	Rustonji Cawasji Patel	15th Apl. 1848.
118	Vetada	13th May 1647
119	Ditto ..	Pestonji Cursetji Modi.	28th Apl 1830.	Not in use.

Besides these 119 Towers of Silence Parsis have twenty-eight burial-places. Of these nineteen are in India: at Allahabad (A.D. 1895), Bangalore (A.D. 1892), Belgaum (A.D. 1875), Bijapur (A.D. 1891), Cannanore (A.D. 1837), Cochin (A.D. 1823), Delhi (A.D. 1842), Dhulia (A.D. 1996), Ferozpur (A.D. 1842), Hoshangabad (A.D. 1896), Hubli (A.D. 1896), Lahore (A.D. 1812), Mangalore (A.D. 1797), Multan (A.D. 1842), Peshwar (A.D. 1842), Rawalpindi (A.D. 1842), Rutlam (A.D. 1896), Sakkar (A.D. 1842), Tallicherry (A.D. 1793); two in Ceylon, at Colombo (A.D. 1846) and Galle (A.D. 1859); two in the Straits, at Macao (A.D. 1829) and Singapore (A.D. 1849); three in China, at Canton (A.D. 1836) Hong-kong (A.D. 1852) and Shanghai (A.D. 1859); one at Zanzibar (A.D. 1889); and one in London (A.D. 1861).

- AGHA KHÂN: His Highness, title of the unrevealed Imâm of the Khojâhs, 41; descendant of Ali, 38; his influence over the outlying tribes of the Upper Indus Valley, 36 note 1, 45; 46. Agha Shâh Hasan Ali the first Agha Khân (1843), 41.
- AGHA SHÂH HASSAN ALI: His Highness; Khojâh Imâm (1844); the first Ismâ'ili unrevealed Imâm to settle in India (1845), 41. See Agha Khân.
- AHL-I-HADITH: people of the tradition, 12. See Wahhâbîs.
- AHMAD BIN ISMÂ'IL: head of the Yuman Sulamâni Bohorâs, 33.
- AHMED: Muhammadan name of Râvjî the Lohâna convert, 51. See Râvjî.
- AHMED: founder of the Karmatîan sect; his nickname Karmatâh; spreads his new doctrines at Nuhrein; his persecution; his flight to Syria, 3 note 3 continued on page 4. See Karmatîans.
- AHMED I.: Sultân of Ahmedâbâd (1411-1443), 6 note 1 (7); spreads Islâm by force; converts Rûjpûts and other Hindus (1414-1420), 5 and note 2, 25 note 1; persecutes Bohorâs, 27 note 1; converts Shîâh Bohorâs to the Sunni faith, 58 note 2; 125.
- AHMED II.: Sultân of Gujârât (1551-1561); his grants of Râdhanpûr and Sami to Fateh Khân Balûch, 17.
- AHMED JÂ'YAR SUFRÂZI: Sayad, ancestor of the Shîrâzi Sayad family of Gujârât, 6 note 1 (6); persuades Sunni Bohorâs to keep apart from Shîâh Bohorâs (1535), 26 note 1, 34; Jâfari Bohorâs take their name after him; his descendants become Pîrs of Jâfari Bohorâs, 34; his power of working miracles; tomb of, at Ahmedâbâd, 34 note 3.
- AHMED KABIR: Sayad, saint, ancestor of the Rifâi Sayad family of Gujârât, 6 note 1 (3); 23; 140.
- AHMED KHATTU: of Sarkhez, Sheikh, one of the four saintly founders of Ahmedâbâd city, 3 note 1.
- AHMEDÂBÂD: city, founded by saints, 3 note 1; chief quarters of Mubdavi Sayads at, 6 note 1; head quarters of Mûsa Shâhs at, 23; former seat of the head Mûlla of Dâûdi Bohorâs at, 81 note 4; tombs at, of Mûsa, 23, of Jâfâr Shîrâzi, 34 note 3, of Pîr Muhammadshâh, 35, of Shâh Âlam, 148; mosques at, 131 note 1; Kûba of (Gujârât), 67; arrival of Memuns at, 51; kings of, exert to spread Islâm, 5 and note 2, 125.
- AIN-I-AKBARI: 14; 65; 147.
- ÂISHA: Prophet Muhammad's wife, her dower, 166 note 1.
- AJAYAPALA: Anahilavâda king (1174-1177), said to have been converted to Islâm, 26 note 2; said to be the most zealous of Musalmân rulers of Gujârât, 5 note 1.
- AJRIR: head-quarters of Husaini Brâhman at, 22; saint of, 6 note 1 (4).
- AKBAR: Mughal Emperor (1572), 3 note 1; his quarrel with the Mirzâs (1571), 10; his conquest of Gajârât (1573-74); slays Jhujâr Khân, 12; 14.
- AKHANI-CHÂR-SHAMBAR: Sunni holiday, 140. See Safar.
- AKHUND: private household tutor, 176 note 1.
- AKÛSA: sacrifice, rite of, 158. See Sacrifice.
- ALÂDHILÂ: spirit treatment resorted to by Meman women, 56 note 4. See Memans.
- ALÂXÛT: hill fort of Dûlâm in Persia; establishment of Hasan Sabâh's power at, 37 and note 5; 40; 48.
- ALÂ-UD-DIN: Emperor, his excuse for entering the Dakhan (1294), 2 note 3; converts Kanauj Brâhman priests of Bahucheraji, 82.
- ALAZIKKI-HIS-SALAM: 87. See Hasnu.
- ALBRO: Balûchîs are said to have come from, 17.
- ALEXANDRIA: mosques at (642-643), 31 note 1.
- ALI: founder of the Alîa Bohora sect (1624), 27; 33.
- ALI: husband of Fâtima, daughter of the Prophet, 7; 16; 127; father of Hasan and Husain, 47, 186; his family falls a victim to the Umayyad Khalffâhs of Damascus, 47 note 1; his titles, 36 note 3, 47, 137; his explanation of Allâh, 41 note 1; Shîâh veneration and Sunni reverence for, 47; Enayds claim descent from, 6 note 1, 7; His Highness Agha Khân traces his descent from, 38; shrine of, 47; 45; 125; believed to have been incarnated in the person of Agha Islâmshâh, 40.
- ALIA BOHORÂS: see Bohorâs.
- ALIRHÂN: early Musalmân governor of Gujârât (1297-1317), a zealous Sunni, 125; his final conquest of the Gujârât coast towns (1297), 2; spreads Islâm by force and introduces the Musalmân faith from Anahilavâda to Broach, 3-5.
- ALIRSHÂHS: see Benawa Beggars.
- ALI-ILÂHIYA: a sect, mentioned by Farishtah, 33.
- ALLÂH-O-AKBAR: God is great, 126; 141; 151; 160 note 3; 169.
- ALMS: Zakât, 126 note 4; 141 and note 3.
- ALMUSTA'ALI: (1091-1101) younger son of Khalffâh Almustansir-billâh; his dispute with his brother Nazâr for secession; Mustâ'aliâns are called after his name, 30 note 1.
- ALMUSTANSIR-BILLÂH: (1036-1094) Khalffâh of Egypt; dispute for the succession to the Khilâfat between his two sons Nazâr and Almustâ'âl, 30 note 1.
- AMBIRA: river in the Surat district, 66.
- AMYL: exorcist; services of, used by women to cast out the spirit of barrenness, 147-149; his experiences during the performance of chillâh or forty-days term, 144.
- AMIR KHUSRAO: Musalmân writer (thirteenth century), 10 note 3; 65.
- AMIR TIMÛR: (1400), introduces Tadziyahs, 139 note 1.
- AMIR-UD-DIN NUZHAT: Sayad, author of Nuzhat ul-Akhbâr, 50 note 2.
- AMÛD: Molesalam Thâkor of, 63.
- AMR-IBNU'L KAS: Muslim conqueror of Egypt, constructs the first pulpit built in Islâm, 181 note 1.
- AMUSEMENTS: field sports; gymnastics, 172; house games, 173-174; music; acting; reading, 174.
- ANAHILAVÂDA: Hindu capital of Gujârât, 26; mosques at; frequented by great number of

- Musalmán traders, 2 note 1; Musalmán faith introduced from, to Broach by Alif Khān (1297), 3-5; kings of, encourage settlement of traders mostly from the Persian Gulf, 2; give kind treatment to traders, 2 and note 3; to early Shīāh preachers (1067), 25; Vāghela kings of, employ Khorāsāni soldiers, 2 note 3; are said to have been converted to Islām, 6 note 1, 26 note 2; 38.
- ANGELS: belief in, 126.
- ANIMALS: kept by Musalmāns, domestic, 97-98; pet, 98-99; birds, 99.
- APPEARANCE: of Musalmāns of regular classes, 7; Dāūdī Bohorās, 23; Khojās, 42; Memāns, 52.
- ARABS: Early, their settlements at Choul, Kalyān, and Supāra, before the adoption of Islām; their religion adopted by the natives on the Malabār coast; religion of, 1 note 1. Muhammādan, their expedition to Indin, (636); against the ports of the Gulf of Cambay (636); their conquest of Jaipur and Udaipur (703-715); their conquest of Ujjain (724); their attack on Broach (730); their fleets sent against the Kāthiāwār coasts (758, 778); take Sindin (830); their attack on Chitor, 1 note 1 continued on page 2; sailors and soldiers, 2; mercenaries, 3 and note 2. Of Special Community of part foreign descent, 11; their two divisions, appearance, dress, character; belong to the Shāfi'ī and Hambali Sunni schools; their personal names, customs, 16-17.
- ARNOLD: Sir Joseph, 37 notes 1 and 2; 47 notes 1 and 3; 49 note 3.
- ARSAĀN SHĀH: Sultān of Ghazni and Hindustān (1115-1118), 68. See Behlīms.
- ARTICLES: chief, of Musalmán faith, 126. See Beliefs.
- ASA: wooden staff in a mosque, 131.
- ĀSĀF: jinn or spirit minister of the Prophet Solomān, his magical exploits, 143. See Magic.
- ASAR: evening prayers, 125 note 3.
- ĀSĀDĀNKĪ: lady possessed by a jinn, 180. See Vows.
- ĀS-HĀUS: Prophet's companions, 34.
- ĀSHURĀ: tenth day of Muharram, held sacred by Sunnis, 139.
- ĀSMĀ: names of God, the two classes of, terrible and merciful, 144.
- ASSASSINS: the order of the Fīdāwis, known in Europe as, 37 and note 1.
- ASTROLOGY, belief in, of Memāns, 56; practice of, by Hussainī Brāhmans, 22.
- ĀSUF JĀH: Nizām, brings Multāni Mochis to the Dakkhan, 77.
- ĀTHARVA VEDA: one of the four Vedas of the Hindus, followed by Hussainī Brāhmans, 22.
- ĀYDICH BRĀHMANS: Mirdhas or official spies in the Pālanpur Superintendency, 18.
- AURANGZĪB: Viceroy of Gujarāt (1644-46), 35 note 1; his persecutions of the Ghermohdis, (1645), 63; Hindus persecuted to adopt Islām by (1646), 5; his removal from the Viceroyalty (1646), 6 note 3; Mughal Emperor (1658-1707), his title of Hazrat Khuld Makāni, 67; spread of the Sunni faith in Gujarāt by his direction, 125; 6 note 1 continued on page 7; 35 note 1; 86; 98.
- ĀVAGĀNA: Afghāns mentioned by Varāha-Mihira (550) under the name of, 10 note 4.
- ĀVATĀKS: incarnation, engrafted on the Ismā'īlian faith to present it in an inviting form to Vishnu and Shakti worshipping followers: Adam, the Prophet, and others described as avatāra of the gods of the Hindu Pantheon, 40; 48 and note 2.
- ĀYAH: maidservant, 96.
- ĀZĀN: call to prayer, 154.
- AZUD-UD-DIN: Sayad, ancestor of the Kashātīs, 64. See Kashātīs.
- BĀBĀ FĪRŪZ: 136. See Abū Lūlū.
- BĀDA GHOR: Abyssinian saint, object of worship of the Sīdīs; tomb of, at Ratanpur, 12.
- BĀBĀ SHUJĀ UD-DĪN, 142. See Abū Lūlū.
- BĀBER: Mughal Emperor (1526-1530), entertains the Mīrzs at his court, 10.
- BĀNIS: of Rādhanpur, 12.
- BANYOLN: the city of, 142; the great well in, 143.
- BĀDĪ: miniature garden, carried before the bridegroom's steed, 165 note 3.
- BADĪ JAMĀT: 34. See Jāfārī Bohorās.
- BADĪ-UD-DĪN MADĀR SHĀH: saint of Syria, 22.
- BADR-UD-DĪN: head Mulla of the Dāūdī Bohorās (1837), 31 note 4.
- BAGHDĀD: fleets from, sent to plunder and conquer Gujarāt coast, 2; shrine of Abūl Kādir Gīlāni at, visited by Memāns, 56.
- BAGLĀNA: in the Nāsik District, 67.
- BAHĀDUR SHĀH: Sultān of Gujarāt (1525-1536), invites Sayad Jamāl, ancestor of the Kādīrī family, to Gujarāt (1530), 6 note 1 (2); Turks and Abyssinians in his army (1531), 3 note 1; accord an asylum to the Mīrzs in Ahmedābād and Broach against the vengeance of Humāyun (1533), 9.
- BAHĀDUR SHĀH: Emperor of Delhi (1707-1719), his order to introduce the Shīāh epithet "Wasī" in public prayers, 125, note 1.
- BAHĀ-UD-DĪN: Nakshband, saint, 20.
- BAHĪE: believed to be the origin of the name Bohorā, 24, note 3.
- BAHĪY: believed to be the origin of the name Bohorā, 25 note 1.
- BAHRĀM SHĀH: Sultān of Ghazni and Hindustān, comes to India (1118); kills Muhammad Behlīm in the battle of Multān, 58. See Behlīms.
- BAHUCHHARA: Hindu goddess, 21; 82. See Bohochra.
- BAHURĀH: believed to be the origin of the name Bohorā, 24 note 3.
- BAITHAK: sitting-room, 92.
- BAITHAK: form of gymnastic exercise, 172. See Amusements.
- BAJĀNA: in the Kāthiāwār Agency, 17.
- BĀKAR ALI: Pīrāna saint, his tomb at Pīrāna worshipped chiefly by Hindus, 76 note 2.
- BAKISHISH: voluntary gifts among Khojās, 49.

- BAKKAS: see Bakhshish.
BAKR I'D: 49; 126; 127. See I'd.
BALA BEHLIM PATTI: vow, 150. See Behlim vow.
BALÁ-EN-LÉNA: sorrow-taking, 160 note 1. See Initiation.
BALA MUHAMMAD SHÁH: Pírána saint, 69; his tomb at Pírána worshipped by the Shaikhs, 76 note 2.
BALHÁRA: Ráshtrakúta kings of Málkhet, sovereigns of Gujarát (752-978), 2 note 1.
BALIBHADRA: bhakti of the fourth yugá or epoch, 48.
BALIDHÁNS: Hindu sacrifice, 48 note 2.
BALÍYÁS: landholders, of part foreign descent, cease to be a separate community, 11; 16.
BÁLTISTÁN: people of, 86 note 3.
BALVONIS: special community of part foreign descent, 11; descendants of Balúchi immigrants, claim to have come from Aleppo and north Syria; language; appearance, grants from Gujarát Sultáns, clans, wives, calling, character, called the Switzers of the East for their fidelity and devotion; Sunnis in name, 17. Jath, origin of; Hindu wives of, appearance, speak Gujarátí; believe in the saint Dádá Mahábali; originally Shíahs, now Sunnis in name, 17-18.
BANÁRAS: Imamsháhí's conversion of Matia Kanbis on their way to, 66.
BANDHÁRÁS: craftsmen; converts of the Hindu caste of the same name; Sunnis by religion, 71.
BANJHÁRÁS: a wandering tribe of traders; converts of the Hindu caste of the same name; trade in cattle and wool; supplied grain to Musalmán and English armies; believe in Hindu gods; form a separate community, 85-86.
BARBER: 84; his elaborate process, 96-97. See Turki Hajáms.
BARBOSA: traveller, his visit to Gujarát (1514), 3 note 1.
BARI: also called Sáchak, procession carrying presents to brides, 165 and note 1.
BARLI: village near Pátan, 63.
BARODA: defeat of Arab mercenaries by the English at (1802), 3 note 2; chief quarters of Mahdavi Sayads, 6 note 1 continued on page 7; Gujarát head-quarters of Husaini Bráhmans, 22; 10; 14.
BARRENNES: of women; horror felt by a Musalmán at; remedies to get rid of, 147-149.
BÁSHARÁ: class of beggars who are under the ordinary Muhammadan law, 19; 20.
BATÁN: title, said to be the origin of the name Pathán, 10 note 4.
BATER: quails, 98. See Birds.
BATWA: village in the Ahmedábád District, 8 note 1.
BÁWARCHI: Musalmán cook, 86.
BÁYIN: third form of divorce, 168.
BÁZIGARS: 82. See Madáris.
BEAMES: Mr., 10 note 3.
BEG: title among Mughals, 9.
BEGAM: title among Sayad women, 7.
BEGGARS: Hindu converts, division of,—into Nondescript idlers and Eleven Brotherhoods; Brotherhoods further divided into Besharaa and Básharaa; Office-bearers in, and constitution of, the Brotherhood, 19-20. See Abdális, Nakshbands, Benawás, 20; Hijdas, 21-22; Husaini Bráhmans; Kalandars, Madáris, 22; Músa Subhás, Rafáls, 23; Rasúlsháhí, 24; Sayads, beggars in Gujarát, 8 note 1.
BEHCHORA: Hindu goddess; Hijdas or Pavaiyas and Kamálias her chief votaries; temple of at Bankhanj-ur, 21; 22; 82. See Bahachara.
BEHLIM: vow, also called Balá-Behlim patti; vowed by women to be performed in the beginning of marriages, sutmdsa and bismillahs; rites relating to. Phadáli or spirit musician, chief actor in the performance of, 150-161.
BEHLIMS: cultivators. Rajpút converts of the Behlim tribe; originally Turks; cease to form a separate class, 68.
BEHRÁN: believed to be the origin of the name Bohora, 24 notes 8.
BEHRINAH: town in Yaman in Lower Arabia, birth-place of missionary Abdulláh; believed to be the origin of the name Bohora, 24 note 4.
BEHRÉFIAS: actors and players, Hindu converts of a mixed class; Sunnis in faith, 80.
BELIEF AND PRACTICE: Early, in astrology, 22, 56; Bhút (Hindu ghost), 142 note 1; charms, 30, 147, 155; Dákan (witch), 142 note 1; Evil Eye, 142; Exorcism, 30; Magic, 50, 142-145; Omens, 22, 30, 145-146; Saints, 17, 22; Sorcery, 56; Spirit, 30, 142. Leading, in the principal tenets of the Musalmán faith; in the unity of God; in angels; in books; in the scriptures; in prophets; in the resurrection, 126-127.
BELLEW: Major, H. W., 10 note 4; 13 note 2.
BENAWÁS: beggars, also called Alifsháhí, drawn from many classes of Muhammadans, Sunnis in name, 20-21.
BEONAR: believed to be the origin of the name Bohora, 25 note 1.
BE-PIE: term of scorn, 127 note 2.
BESHARAA: beggars above the ordinary Muhammadan law, 19; 20; 22; 23; 24.
BETROTHALS: rites and ceremonies relating to, costs of, 162, 163 note 1; gifts in, 163 and note 2.
BHÁNDHÚNJAS: grain-parchers, Hindu converts, do not form a separate class, 71.
BHAKTAS: four preachers of the four Hindu *yugá*s or epochs, 48.
BHANDARI: officer in a beggar brotherhood, 19. See Beggars.
BHÁNDIS: Hindu converts, buffoons, story-tellers, 81; 165.
BHÁNMATIS: Nat women taking part in acrobatic feats; origin of the name of, 89. See Nats.
BHÁNDORI: spirit-laden obstetric cord worn by pregnant women, 148; 149.
BHÁRYAL I.: Ráo of Kachh (1585-1631), arrival of Dádú Pír in Bhuj in the time of, 41.
BHÁTHI: dinners cooked at a house of mourning, 160.

- BLATINDA: town between Dehli and the Satlej, 81.
- BHATTIS: tribe of Rajpûts converted by Mahmûd of Ghazni (1001-1030); village servants, 81.
- BHAWANI: Hindu goddess, 82. See Babuchana.
- BHAWYAS: strolling players, converts of the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunnis in religion, 81; Hindu players, 154 note 2.
- BHIM II.: kolañki king of Anahilvâda, said to have been converted to Islâm by Nûr Satâgur (1240), 26 note 2; 38.
- BHISTIS: watermen, also called Pakhâlis, Hindu converts, 8; 96; officiating priest in boat-offerings, 152-153; 159.
- BHUV: capital of Kaebh, arrival of Pir Dîda at, 41.
- BHUKHARIS: chief Sayad family in Gujarât, 6 note 1.
- BHUNETE: see Bhutadi.
- BHÛT: Hindu spirit, belief in, 142 note 1.
- BHÛTADI: form of exercise, 172. See Amusements.
- BHUVAS: landholders of part foreign descent; cease to be a separate community, 11; 15.
- BIÂZI: the Fair, title of the Surat Bohora missionary, 27.
- Bîni: title among Sheikh women, 8.
- BÎNÎ-KÎ-SAMNAK: see Earthen Dish, 151.
- BIDNULFI: author of the Tribes of the Hindu Kush, 36 note 3; 39 note 4.
- BIDRI: lead and silver work, skill of Masalmâns in, 123.
- BIER: Khojâh hymns, 40.
- BIRNE KILÂN: Jamadâr of Pâtanpur, 65 note 2.
- BIRADH: pots, 149. See Bîradh-bharna.
- BIRADH-BHARNA: pot-filling ceremony preceding all joyous rites, 149.
- BIRAT: see Bîradh.
- BIRDS: kept by Masalmâns, 99. See Animals.
- BIRONG: Viramgâm, 24 note 3.
- BIRLÂVI BOHORAS: G1. See Bohorâs.
- BIRTH: rites and ceremonies relating to, charms and talismans used to secure speedy delivery; expenses connected with, 154-155, 156 note 1.
- BIRTH-DAY: celebration of, 159.
- BIRYÂNI: dish, first class public dinner called after, east of, 113 and note 1.
- BISMILLÂH: initiation, rite of, 159, 160.
- BIRÂNÂNÎ: ghoul, 142 note 1.
- BLOOMMAN: Aîn-i-Abkari, 6 note 1 (5), 14; 147; 159 note 4.
- BOAT-OFFERINGS: also called Nîos; made to the water-spirit in fulfilment of vows; description and rites of; Bhishitî or water-carrier officiates at, 152, 153, 158.
- BOHORAS: Traders; Shiâhs of the Mustafilian branch of the great Ismâili sect, 24, 30; meaning and derivation of the name, 24 and notes 2, 3 and 4; 25 note 1; name extended to converts from all the unarmed castes, 25 and note 1; sect founded in Gujarât by missionary Abdullah (1067), conversions first made in Cambay, Anahilvâda, or Pâtan, 26 and note 1; arrival of the religious head of the trading Shiâhs from Yaman with a band of followers (close of the eleventh century), 3, 25 note 2; conversions made by early Shiâh missionaries from the great trading centres (eleventh century), progress of the sect in Gujarât (1130-1380), 26; sect repressed (1390-1413), 27; some of the Shiâhs converted to the Sunni faith (1391), 3 note 3, 26 note 1; persecutions of, by Sunni rulers (1411-1554), 27 and note 1; transfer of the seat of the head priest of, from Yaman to Gujarât (1539); find shelter under the British (close of eighteenth century); four schisms from the main body of, Alia, Jaafari, Nâgoshi, and Sulaimâni, 27.
- Alia: one of the schisms from the main body of Shiâhs, sect founded by Ali (1624), 27, 33.
- Biâzi: Arabian converts to the Ismaili faith made by a Bohora missionary called Biâzi the Fair, 27.
- Dâid: main body of Shiâhs, settlements of, 28, 32 note 3; appearance; language, dress, and ornaments, 28; food, 29; houses, 29 and note 1; calling, character, condition, 29; religion, special beliefs regarding the spirits of the dead; Indian beliefs, 30; their position among Muslim sectaries, 30 note 1; names, customs, written prayer placed in the hands of the dead, 31 and note 2; community; religious and social head of, the Mallu, 31 and notes 3 and 4, 32 and notes 1 to 6; taxes, 33 and note 1; prospect, 33.
- Nâgoshi: or non-fleshating, schisms from the main body of Shiâhs (1789), 27, 33.
- Sulaimâni: followers of the Yaman priest Sulaimân, progress of, since 1591, 27, 33.
- Sunnis, Cultivators: or village descendants of Hindu converts made by the Sunni rulers of the province from the unarmed classes (fourteenth and fifteenth centuries), 24, 25, 58 and note 2; distribution of, 53; additions to, both from Hindus and Shiâh Bohorâs (1411-1513), 58 note 2; foreign element in the Broach Bohorâs, mainly of the Mârvâdis, 59 and note 1; appearance; language; food, 59; dress and ornaments of men, 59 and notes 2 and 3; of women, 60 and notes 1 and 2; character, 60 and notes 3 and 4; condition, 60; names and surnames, 59 note 1 and 60; religion, customs, 60-61; success of Wahhâbi preachers among, Broach, Surat, Bîriâvi Bohorâs (1880-1897), 61; community, prospects, 62.
- Jaafari: descendants of the Dâidi Bohorâs; named after Sayad Janfar Shirâzi; their other names; separate from the main body of Shiâhs (1391), 3 note 3, 26 note 1, 34; continue to intermarry with the main body till 1536, 26 note 1, 34; mostly traders; Arabian traders follow many Arab customs; known as Kabriâs; form an organized body, 31, 35.
- BOHORA: surname, 24 note 2.
- BOOKS: belief in, 126; reading of, by men and women, 174 and note 2.
- BOTAN: 159. See Salt-tasting.
- BOWIDES: Persian house of, 20; Sultâns (945-1097), 136 note 3. See Burvâh.
- BAHMA: Pir Sadr-ud-dîn, the incarnation of, 40, 48. See Avâtâra.
- BRIGGS: General, 3 note 3; 77; 85 and note 1; 86 note 1.
- BRHAT-SAMHITA: Sanskrit work by Varaha-Mihira, 10, note 4.

- BRITISH : Arab mercenaries obstruct the establishment of the power of, in Gujarāt (1802), 3 note 2; give aid to Muhammad Ali the Pāsha of Egypt to put down the power of the Wahābīs (1812), 12 note 3; 27; 60 note 4.
- BROACH : attacked by Arabs (780), 1 note 1; revolt of Momnas at (1691), 76; revolt of Mntia Kanbis at, 67; disturbance of Sunni Bohorās at (1857), 60; note 4; Musalmān smith introduced into, from Anahilavāda by Alifkhan, 3-5.
- BUDHA : ninth incarnation of Vishnu, 48. See Avatārs.
- BUDHA YĀKUB : Sayad, ancestor of the Uraizi Sayad family, 6 note 1 (7).
- BUILDINGS : religious, 130-132. See Imāmbādas, Masjid, Namāzgāh.
- BUKHĀRIS : chief Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (7); 67; 127 note 2.
- BURHANPŪR : former seat of the head Mulla of the Dāūdī Bohorās, 31 note 4.
- BURHĀN-UD-DIN KUTBI ĀLAM : Sayad, ancestor of the Bukhārī Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (7).
- BURHĀN-UD-DIN : head Mulla of the Dāūdī Bohorās (1893), 31 note 4.
- BURKA : veil-robe, 29; 34.
- BURTON : Sir Richard, 10 note 4; 15 note 4; 181 note 3; 160 note 3.
- BŪWĀH : Persian house of, its supremacy in Persia (946), 20. See Bonides.
- BUZURG ALI KĀDIRI : Pīr of Mundra, descendant of Pīr Eusuf-ud-dīn, 50 note 2; 51.
- CAIRO : Ismāīlīa doctrines first preached at, (953-975), 48.
- CAMBAY : port of, mosques at, 2 note 1, 131 note 1; arrival of Musalmān missionaries at, 28 and note 1, arrival of Persian refugees at (1723), (1726), (1757), 3 note 2; shrine of Pīr Muhammad Ali at, 26 note 1; grand Imāmbāda at, 132; king of, converted to Islām by Mulla Muhammadali, 26 note 1; Nawabs of, spread the Shiāb faith, 125. Gulf of, Muhammadan Arab expedition against the ports of (636), 1 note 1 continued on page 2.
- CAMPBELL : Sir George, 10 note 3.
- CAPTAINS : 14. See Nāiatas.
- CENSUS DETAILS : of Gujarāt Musalmān population, according to occupation (1872 census), 118-121; according to sects (1891 census), 1.
- CHĀBUK SAWĀR : Musalmān jockey; horse-trainer, 97-98; 123; 172 note 1.
- CHĀCH : disciple of Nūr Satāgur, kills Nūr Satāgur, 38.
- CHĀCHNĀMAH : 1 note 1; 69.
- CHADAWWĀS : Delhi shoes, 100.
- CHAGHATAI : Tartar-Turkish dialect, 9 note 1.
- CHAGHTĀIKHĀN : son of Changuzkhān; Chughadda Mughals called after him, 9 & note 1.
- CHĀKES : race of sun-worshippers in Kashmir, their conversion to Islām, 39.
- CHĀLS : horse pace, 93; 172 note 1.
- CHAMPBĒI : jasmine, 150.
- CHAMPĀ : flower tree, near the tomb of saint Mūsā at Ahmedābād, its holiness, 123 note 2.
- CHĀMPĀNER : the Mirzās take possession of, after A.D. 1568, 10.
- CHĀNDERMĀN : name of a vow-receiving ginn or spirit, 130.
- CHANDŪT : Indian lark, 99. See Birds.
- CHANGIS : landholders, special community of part foreign descent, 11; 15.
- CHANGIZKHĀN : powerful Gujarāt noble, protects the Mirzās; is assassinated by Sidi JhuJheirkhān (1568), 10; 12.
- CHĀR-JUMĀGIS : first four Fridays after marriage, 167.
- CHĀR YĀRI : 34. See Jaafari Bohorās.
- CHARITY : duty enjoyed by Musalmān law, 126, 171 note 2; secret among Memans, 52 and note 4; vow to give in, 127.
- CHARMS : belief in, 30, 147, 155. [86.]
- CHĀTEAS : wandering tribe of Hindu converts, 173 and note 3.
- CHAUSAR : Indian backgammon, 173 and note 3. See Amusements.
- CHELAS : 19. See Khādimas.
- CHESS : 173 and note 1. See Amusements.
- CHĒUL : about thirty miles south of Bombay, early Arab settlement at, 1 note 1; Musalmāns found at, 2 note 1.
- CHĪNĀRĀS : Hindu converts, labourers, also called Gbāgharias or Pellicot People, Moslems in name only, 86.
- CHĪHATĪ : sixth-day celebration after birth, 155.
- CHĪPĀS : calico printers, converts of the Gujarātī and Muvāḍī castes of the same name, Sunnis by religion, 71-72; believe in the Bukhārī Pīr, 127 note 2.
- CHILAM : bowl of a tobacco pipe, 111 note 1.
- CHILD-GIVERS : dead saints, trees near the tombs of certain saints, 147-148. See Amil.
- CHILLĀN : period of forty days during which an exorcist learns his incantations, 144.
- CHISHT : Sūfi school, 8 note 3.
- CHISHTIS : chief Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (4); branch of the Fīrūkī section of Shaikhs, descendants of Sheikh Nizām-ud-din Chishtī, 8 note 2; Hindu converts of the Chisht school, 8 note 3; 74.
- CHITOR : town, attacked by Arabs, 1 note 1 continued on page 2.
- CHOTE : name of missionary Shams-ud-dīn, 30 and note 3.
- CHRISTIANS : among early Arabs, 1 note 1.
- CHŪDIWĀLAS : bracelet-makers, converts of the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunnis by religion, 72-73.
- CHUGHADDA : Indian Mughals, 9 and note 1.
- CHUNĀNĀS : lime-burners, converts of low class Hindus, Sunnis by religion, 72.
- CHUNPADIYĀS : silk-knot-printers, Hindu converts, claim Arab descent, Sunnis by religion, 72.
- CHŪNTĀL : sub-district, forty miles north of Ahmedābād, 82.
- CIRCUMCISION : rite of, 160-161. See Customs.
- COLERBROOK : 13; 26 note 1.
- COMMUNITIES : see Subdivisions.
- COMMUNITY : Musalmān population as, in matters religious, calling, amusement, 175.
- CONDITION : of Gujarāt Musalmāns, 122-124.
- CONOLLY : Mr., 26 note 1; 30 note 1.
- CONVERTS : Hindu, 3-5; name of the classes of, 20, 24; 58; 70; 80; 85; accounts of, 19-20.

- CORNWALLIS : Marquis of (1791-92), 86.
CRAFTS : details of the 1872 census, 122-123.
 See Occupation.
- CRAITSMEN : classes of, Hindu converts as, 71-80. See Bandharis, Bhādbhūnjas, Chhipas, 71; Chūdndigiras, Chundris, Chūdiwālas, 72; Ghānchis, Kāghzis, 73; Kadiās, Kasāis, 74; Kharādis, Khātkis, Lohārs, Maniārs, 75; Momuds, 76; Mūltānis and Mūltāni Moohis, 77; Nālbands, Pānjuigārs, 78; Rangrez, Salāts, tonis, 79; Tais, 80.
- CUSTOMS : pregnancy, 147-154; birth, 154-155; naming, 156-167; sacrifice; fortieth day, 158; salt-tasting; birth-day, 159; initiation, 159-160; circumcision, 160-161; first Ram-mazān fast, 161; pre-soot or hadiya, 162; betrothal, 162-163; marriage, 163-167; divorce, 163; death, 163-170; mourning, 170.
- DABHOI : head-quarters of the Mahdavi Sayads in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 continued on page 7; 61 note 2.
- DĀDĀ MĀHĀBĀLI : saint, enshrined at Gotar-ka, in north Gujarāt, 17.
- DĀDĀ MĪRĀN : Ahmedābād Sayad, honoured by Mīrāsīs, 83.
- DĀDV : Pīr, of Sindhi Kbojāh family; invested with maotlo of pīr or saint by the Kbojāh Imām; conversions by, at Jāmnagar (1549), at Bhuj (1585-1591), 41, 48.
- DAF : drum, players on the, 20.
- DĀFĀLIS : 20. See Abdālis.
- DĀGR-DENĀ : breadlog among Nats, 89 note 1.
- DĀI : missionary, 26; 37. Head Mulla, 32, Midwife, 154.
- DĀGLAM : Persian district, 37; 38.
- DAILY LIFE : of men, of rich class, middle class, poor class, 116-117; of women, of rich class, middle class, poor class, 117.
- DĀIRĀN : settlement of Mahdavis in Pālanpur, 61 and note 1.
- DĀKAN : Hindu witch, the belief in, 142 note 1.
- DĀLĀN : court-yard of a house, 91.
- DĀZBHĀT : dish, public dinners called after; cost of, 113, 114 and note 1.
- DAND : form of gymnastic exercise, 172. See Amusements.
- DANKA : drum, 20.
- DANGĀN : tomb of a saint, 160.
- DARNSTETER : 10 note 4.
- DARŪD : calling down blessings, on the Prophet, 147 and note 1.
- DARYA PĪR : Indos spirit prayed to by Hindu priests to drive away Eusuf-ud-din, 61.
- DASSONDH : tythes, 41, 49. See Taxes.
- DASTAR-KHĀN : 111. See Meals.
- DĀUD BIN AJARSHĀH : high priest of the Gujarāt Bohorās (1588), 27.
- DĀUD BIN KUTUBSHĀH : high priest of the Gujarāt Bohorās, 27.
- DĀUDIS : see Bohorās.
- DAYS : lucky and unlucky, 146 and notes 2 and 3.
- DEATH : rites and ceremonies relating to, the dead body; bier or janāzah, funeral; to help in funeral a farz or dnry; ciarat feast; dinners on; mourning, 168-170.
- DESI : title among some of the Dhandhūka village Bohorās, 62.
- DEHĀGARS : 75. See Khātkis.
- DEHĀRĀLA : armed population of Gujarāt, 25.
- DHOZ : drum, players on the, 12; 21; 89; 137; 159; 163; 174 and note 1; 175.
- DHOBI : washerman as servant, 96.
- DHOOLS : drum players, 88; 96. See Mīrs.
- DHOZĀJI : port in Kāthiāwār, seat of the provincial head or mukh of the Memans, 57.
- DHŪLDHOYĀS : Dust-washers, as labourers, converts from the Hīdo Khatri caste, form a separate body, funnis in faith, 86.
- DINERS : Feast-day, kind of food served at, cost of, 114-115. Public, occasions of, form of invitation to, ceremony observed at, kind of food served at, the three chief classes of 112-114; 169-170.
- DIVANKHĀNA : public room or parlour, 91; 94.
- DIVORCE : forms of, looked on with dislike, less resorted to by Indian Musalmāns, 166 and note 1.
- DIVĀLI : period best suited to subject evil spirits, 145. Hīdo New Year, considered an evil spirit time, 148. See Magic.
- DOCTOR : Law, 133-135. See Maulavi, Religious officers.
- DŌMS : 83. See Mīrs.
- DŌMIS : Mīr women, 83; women players, 160; female singers, 164; 166; 174 note 1.
- DOXRU : 166. See Meher.
- DRESS : of men, of the rich class, 100-101 and note 2; change of fashion of, 100 note 3; of the middle class, 102 and note 1; of the poor class, 102 and note 2; of women of the rich class, 103, 104 note 1; of the middle class, 105, 106 note 1; of the poor class, 106 and note 2; of children, 107 and note 1 continued on page 108; of Kbojāhs, 42-44; of Memans, 53-55.
- DŪDVALĀS : milkmen, converts from Sābalias and Gauri Hindu castes, their other names, Sunnis by faith, form a separate community, 35; also called Maosūris, 35 note 1.
- DURS : among Kbojāhs, 49 note 2. See Taxes.
- DURF : Grant (1744), 14 note 3.
- DŪLAS : people possessed by the spirit of the martyrs, vows offered to, 128; bridegrooms, 137; also persons possessed by the spirit of the bridegroom-elect of Husain's daughter; the process to gain the inspiration of, 138. See Muharram.
- DUTIES : enjoined by Musalmān law, belief in the principal tenets of the faith; prayers; fasts in the month of Ramazān; pilgrimages; alms, 126, 171 note 2. See Belief.
- EARTHEN DISH : rite of, 151. See Sahnak, Kandūri.
- EIDRŪSIS : Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1.
- ELEGY SINGER : 133. See Marsākhkhān.
- ELIAS : prophet, 152. See Khizr, Khwājah.
- ELLIOT : Sir Henry, 69; 70.
- EMBROIDERY : special skill of Musalmāns in the art of, 123.
- EMPERORS : Delhi, persecutions of Gujarāt Bohorās under, 27 note 1. Mughal, spread of Islām by, 5; 125.
- ETNVOH NOBLES : Sidi, of Dehli and Lakhnau, 12. See Ridis.

BÓSUR-UD-DÍN KÁDIRI: Sayad saint, his descent; converts Siudh ruler of the Samma dynasty; converts Fichána community with its leader Múnekji; changes the name of the community to Muámin; retires to Irák; his descendants become the religious heads of the converted community, 50-51.

EXORCISM: belief in, 30.

EXORCIST: 147. See Amil.

EXPEDITIONS: Arab; to India, 1 note 1.

FADÁLIS: beggars, 29. See Abdális.

FAIRY: vows to, 130. See Vows.

FAJR: dawn, prayers said at, 126 note 3.

FAKIRS: religious beggars, 19. See Beggars.

FÁL KHONA: soothsaying, practice of, 56.

FAMINE: in North Gujjarát, Knehh, and Ká-thiáwár (1813), 51.

FARAJ: Al, son of Uthmán, 1 note 3 continued on page 4.

FARHAT-UL-MÚLK: Hindu convert governor of Gujjarát encourages Hinduism, 5.

FARÍF-Y-SOUZA: (1664), 28 note 1.

FARÍD-UD-DÍN-SHAKARGAR: Shnikh, ancestor of the Farídi branch of Shaikhs, 8 note 2. See Shaikhs.

FARÍS: branch of the Fárdki Shaikhs, 8 note 2. See Shaikhs.

FARISHTAH: historian, 3 note 3; 10 note 4; 25 note 2; 39 and note 2; 50 note 3; 53.

FARÍSIS: section of Shaikhs, of pure foreign descent; two branches of, 8 and notes 2 and 3. See Shaikhs.

FAST: Ramazán, 127. See Ramazán, Vows.

FATEKHÁN: Balúch, obtains in gift Rádhan-púr and Sami, 17.

FATEPÚR SIKHRI: tomb of Sheikh Salim-i-Chishti at, 147.

FATCH SHÁH: king of Kashmír (1453-59), Cháks converted to Islám during the reign of, 39.

FATIMA: opening chapter of the Kurán, reading of, 129; 130; 147 and note 1; 150, 151; 157; 163.

FATILÁN: wick, 133. See Palta.

FÁTIMAH: Lady, eldest daughter of the Prophet, wife of Ali and mother of Hasan and Husain, 6 note 1; 7; 16; 45; 47; vows to, fast offered by, 127; offerings made to, in the earthen dish rito, 151; dowry of, 16; note 1.

FÁTIMI: dynasty in Egypt (910-1171), founded by Obeidulláh, powers of the Ismá'ilians originated with, 47. See Obeidulláh and Ismá'ilis.

FÁTIMITE KILLÁFAT: raised in Egypt on the basis of opinions analogous to Karmatinn by Obeidulláh (919), 3 note 3, continued on page 4, 87; quarrel for succession to (1034), 30 note 1, 37. See Obeidulláh.

FEASTS: Private, occasions for giving, way of serving at, 112. Public, among Díddi Bohorás, 31, and note 3.

FIDÁ'S: see Fidawís.

FIDAWÍS: order founded by Hasan Sabáh; known in Europe as the Assassins; meaning of the name, 37 and note 2.

FIELD SPORTS: 172. See Amusements.

FINCH: (2610), 15 note 2.

FI'RÚZ SHÁH: Tughlak, Enlásh of Delhi, (1351-1393), 3 note 3; 70.

FITRAH: form of charity in Ramázan Id, 111.

FOOD: 108-115; of the rich, 108-109; of middle class, of the poor, 109; marketing of, costs of, 110; stimulants, 110-111; meals, 111-112; served at private feasts, 112; at public dinners, 112-114; at feast-day dinners, 114-115.

FORBES: Mr., James (1781), 3 note 2; 29 note 1; 63; 155 note 1.

FOREIGNERS: arrival in Gujjarát of Arab sailors and soldiers (seventh, eighth, and ninth century), 1 note 1, 2; traders from Persian Gulf (ninth and tenth century), 2 and note 1; invaders from the north (eleventh and twelfth century), 2 and notes 2 and 3; the religious head of Shiáh trading Bohorás with a band of followers (close of the eleventh century), 3; soldiers, traders, refugees, and slaves (thirteenth to seventeenth centuries), 3 and note 1; the Zaujra Sídis (middle of seventeenth century), 3; Arab mercenaries and Persian political refugees (eighteenth century), 3 and note 2.

FORTIETH DAY: after child-birth, thanksoffering to Khájah Khizr on, 158.

FRIDAY: day of rest for all Musalmáns; 117, service on, 126.

FURNITURE: house, kept by the rich, 92-93; by the middle class, 94; by the poor, 95; details of, 95 note 2.

GÁDITS: cartmen, 35. See Díddwálás.

GAMES: indoor, 173-174. See Amusements.

GÁSIETIS: Hindu converts, holders of gám or village, intermarry with Kshatrias, 62.

GANDHARAFS: singers, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunáti in religion, 81-82.

GAROTA D'ORTA: Portuguese historian (1530), 15.

GATES OF MAKKAH: Gujjarát ports, 3 note 1. See Abwáh-ul-Makkah.

GAYLIS: See Díddwálás.

GENII: vows to, 130. See Vows.

GHÁDUS: word, possessing magical power, 143. See Magic.

GHÁNOHIS: oilmen, descendants of converts of the Hindu Pinjára and Ghánchi castes; known as Ghánchi-Bohorás; call themselves Minsuris; Sunnis in religion; curious forms of names of; form a separate body, 78.

GHAT-PÁTE: heart prayer, Khójah sacrament, 49.

GHAT PÁTH MANTRA: prayer of the Shakti-panthis, 48.

GHEIB MUKALLÍD: 12. See Wahhábis.

GHERSIEHIS: Hindu converts, and foreign Musalmáns who do not believe in Mehdi, also called Mohdavis, followers of Sayad Mahammad Junnuri, 62; persecutions of, by Sultán Muzaffar II. (1523), by Aurangzib (1645), 63; dáirah of, at Pálanpur, 64 and note 1; customs of, 64. See Mahdavi, Mansuris.

GHILÁN: saint of, 6 note 1 (2).

GIRNÁR: hill, 1 note 1. See Újjanta.

GOD: belief in the unity of, 126. See Beliefs.
GORKHODRÁS: grave diggers, of mixed origin, Sunnis in religion, 87.
GOTARKA: village about eight miles west of Rádhampur, shrine of saint Dádá Mahábalí at, 17.
GUJARÁT: arrival of foreigners in, 1-3; arrival of missionaries and learned men in, 3 and note 3, 6 note 1, 23, 38, 49; arrival and settlement in, of foreign Musalmán families, 3 note 1; of chief Sarrád families, 6 note 1; of the Mirás, 10; of Memans, 51; conquest of, by Alif Khán (1297), 2; by Záfár Khán (1371), 3 note 3; by Humáyún (1535), 9; by Akbar (1573-74), 12; decadence of the Sultáns of (1531-1561), 17.
GUJARÁTIS: expel the Maghál governors of Humáyún from their charges (1536), 10.
GUNZ: iron spike, used by Ráfi beggars, 23.
GURGH: company of Muharram dirge singers, 138 note 1 continued on page 139.
GYMNASTICS: '72. See Amusements.

HABISHIS: Abyssinians (Negroes), in Gujarát troops, (1572) 3 note 1, 11. See Sidis.
HADRAVAT: southern province of Arabia, the Biblical Hazarmaveth, Arabs come from, 15 note 4.
HADRAMI: Arab inhabitant of Hadramant, his character, 15 note 4.
HADYA: present, given to child's teacher, 162. See Customs.
HÁIRI: title; ability to recite the Kuraán by heart is the chief qualification to obtain it; other qualifications to obtain it; consideration shewn to, 131. See Law Doctor.
HÁJ: see Pilgrimage.
HÁJÁMS: butlers, 81. See Turki Hájáms.
HÁJI: pilgrim to Makkah, 56.
HÁJJAY: son of Yusuf, India described to, 1 note 1 continued on page 2.
HÁJJÁY: Al, governor of Irik (700), kills a large number of Sayads and learned men, 14 note 3.
HAKIM: Musalmán physician, qualifications of, 122 and note 1.
HÁLÁKU KHÁN: Tartar, his massacre of the Ismáíliya population of Persia, 41.
HÁNDAL: Al, Sunni Imám (783), 125 note 2, 126.
HAMBALI: one of the four Sunni schools, 10; 126 note 1.
HAMMAM: bath-room, 131.
HANAFI: one of the four Sunni schools, 56; 150 note 1.
HANSRÁJ: grandson of Mánékji Lohána, named Táji Muhammad on his conversion to Islám, 51.
HARISHCHANDRA: bhakta or preacher of the second gugd or cycle, 48.
HARÍTHA: special holiday Arab meal, 16.
HÁRÚT: angel of high estate, first teacher of magic, his trial in the world, his eternal damnation, 142-143. See Magic and Márút.
HASAN: son of Ali, the martyr, second Shíah Imám, 45; 47; 125 note 2; 127; 129; 133; 136; 139.

HASAN: Alá Zikri-his Salám, fourth successor of Hasan Sabáh; promulgates new doctrines; transfers the Imámate from the Fátimites to himself; declares himself the Unrevealed Imám (1163); is believed to have sent the first missionary to India; His Highness Agha Khán traces his descent from Ali through, 37; 48. See Nazárians.
HASAN BIN INVAL: (1872), head of the Enlatimani Bohorás, 33.
HASAN SANÁI: Ismáíliya missionary; founds the order of Fidawis; supports Nazár's claim to the Egyptian succession; makes the power of the Ismáíliya supreme in Persia; concentrates his powers at Alamút; ceases to act as da'i and political emissary of the Fátimites; makes himself known by the title Shukh-ul-Jabal, his death (1124); powers of the Ismáíliya under his two immediate successors, 37; 48. See Nazárians.
HÁTIM: of Tai, Arab hero, famous for his generosity, 80.
HAZNAT ALI: Shíah holiday, on the 21st day of Ramazán, 140.
HAZNAT KUDLO MAKÁNI: title of the Emperor Aurangzib, 67.
HIZRÁTS: vows made to gonil or fairies, rites relating to, 130. See Vows.
HIMACHÁRYA: great Jain teacher of Sidhráj, said to have been converted to Islám, 26 note 2.
HINXA: seed of, is burnt to drive away evil spirits, 155 and note 1.
HIJÁZ: Al, Arabs of; 17.
HINDAS: beggars, emasculated male rotaries of the goudas Behechra, 21-22; process of the emasculation of, 21; 151 and note 2. See Paraiyás.
HIND: Al, Indit, described to Hajjaj by Ibn-i-Kiriyyah, 1 note 1.
HINDU: converts. See Converts.
HIS (X-UD-DIN): Farnár viceroy of Gujarát, 63. See Farnárs.
HOLY DAYS: 136-142. General Muharram, 137-139; Ramazán 'Id; Bakr 'Id, 141. Shíah: Tenth of Safar, 139; Nineteenth and Twenty-first of Ramzán, 140; Eighteenth of Zuhajj, 141; Twenty-eighth of Zuhajj, 142. Sunni: Thirteenth of Safar, 139; First Wednesday of Safar; Twelfth of Rabi-ul-awwal; Eleventh of Rabi-us-Sáni; Eleventh of Rajab; Fourteenth of Shában, 140. Gujarát Musalmán: Seventeenth of Rabi-ul-awwal, 140. Khojeh: 41; 49; 50 and note 1.
HOROGORE: drawn by Brahmans, 151 note 3.
HORSE-DEALING: chief trade of the Kábilis, 14.
HORSHOR: Lord. See Nál Sáheb.
HOUSES: of the rich, 91 and notes 1 & 2, 92-93; of the middle class, 94; of the poor, 95; Dáúdí Bohorás, 29 and note 1.
HUKKAN: tobacco pipe, 111 and note 2.
HUMAYÚN: Maghál Emperor, entertainment of the Mirás at the court of, his invasion and conquest of Gujarát (1533); 9-10.
HUNA: White. See Mihira Gurjara.
HUSAIN: son of Ali and Fátimah, third Shíah Imám, Martyr, 22; 45; 47; 62; 125 note 2; 127; 129; 133; 136 and note 3; 139; shrine of, 47.

- HUSAINI BRÁHMANS: religious beggars, followers of the Atharva Veda, call themselves after Husain the Prophet's grandson, follow some of the practices of the Hindu faith, means of livelihood of, beliefs among them; their head-quarters, 22.
- HUSAIN-UD-DIN: chief Mulla of Dáddi Bohorás (1882), 31 note 4.
- HUSAIN-UD-DIN: chief Mulla of Dáddi Bohorás (1893), 31 note 4.
- HUSEIN: Sultán of Khurásán, ancestor of the Mirzas entertained at the Mughal court, 10.
- IBNI ASIR: 3 note 3.
- IBN-I-BATÚTA: (1342), 14 note 3.
- IBN-I-HAUKAL: (943), 2 note 1.
- IBNI-KHALDÚN: (1332-1406), 143.
- IBNI-KHALLIKÁN: 68 note 1.
- IBNI-KIRIYYÁN: describes India, 1 note 1 continued on page 2.
- IBRÁHÍM: father of Ali, the founder of the Alia Bohora sect, 33.
- I'D: festivals, Bakr, festival of sacrifice, on the tenth day of Zilhajj month, observances of, 141; feasts and prayers on, 115; 126; 127; 132; 135; 136. Ramazán, festival at the end of Ramazán fast, on the first day of Shawwál month, observances of, 111; feasts and prayers on, 115; 126; 127; 132; 133; 136. Shidás, festival on account of Pir Dádu's investiture, observed by Khojáhs only, 41.
- IDDAT: term of three months after divorce, 163.
- I'DGÁN: Sunni prayer-place to hold I'd or festival service, also called Namázgáh, 127 note 1; 130; 132; 141. See Religious Buildings.
- ID-I-GHADIR: great Shiáh holiday on the eighteenth of Zilhajj, 141.
- IDOL WOBSHIPERS: among early Arabs, 1 note 1.
- IDRÍS: prophet, said to have taught weaving and sewing to the Társ, 80.
- IDRÍS: Al, historian (1070-1100), 2 note 1.
- ID-UL-FITR: see I'd-ur-Ramazán.
- ID-UZ-ZULÁ: see I'd-ul-Bakr.
- IHTAM-TAZASHAT: name, possessing special powers, 143. See Magic.
- IHTAM-KALASHAT: name, possessing special powers, 143. See Magic.
- IMÁN-UD-DIN: a Hadramaut saint, 13 note 4.
- IMÁNÁDÁS: Shiáh private mourning chapels, 131; 132; recitals of elegies at, 132, 133. See Religious Buildings.
- IMÁMS: leaders of the Prophet's family, 3 note 3 continued on page 4; Religious leaders, 131; Shiáh, 126 note 2; Sunni, 126 note 2, 126; Concealed, 48.
- IMÁMSHÁN: Pírání Pír, founds a new sect in Gujarát, 40; works miracles and makes many converts, 3 note 3 continued on page 4, 66, 76 and note 1; denounces the Khojáh practice of tythe gathering and is excommunicated, 41; his death (1512); his followers among Matia Kanbis, 66, among Momnas, 76; shrine of, at Karamtuh, 3 note 3 continued on page 4.
- IMÁN-UD-DIN: Sayad, son of Imám Sháh, Pírání Pír, died at Karamtuh, 3 note 3 continued on page 1.
- INCARNATIONS: 40, 48. See Avatars.
- INDEBTEDNESS: 124. See Condition.
- INITIATION: see Bismilláh.
- ISÁFI NIMÁZ: night prayer of the Khojáhs, 49.
- ISBÁNÍ: Al, famous Háfiz and historian, 65 note 1.
- ISNÁ: night prayer, 126 note 3.
- ISNÁK: prayer following the morning prayer, 126 note 3.
- ISMÁIL: son of Muhammad, son of the sixth Shiáh Imám Jaáfar Sádik; the last of the revealed Imáms according to the Ismailians; 47, 48; his dispute with his uncle about the succession to the Imámato (765); his supporters called Ismáilis, 80 note 1.
- ISMÁIL: Sádi, minister of the Bábis of Rádhanpur ('820), 12.
- ISMÁILIS: sect of Shiáhs, called after Ismail, grandson of the sixth Shiáh Imám, 80 note 1; also known as Fevers (because they reckon seven Imáms) and Ismailians, 47; separation of, from the main body of Shiáhs (765), 30 note 1; power of, originated with the foundation of the Fátimi dynasty by Obaidullah (910), 47; Ismailia doctrines first publicly taught at Mahdia (910), at Cairo (933-975), 48; rise of, in Persia (from the beginning of the eleventh century); power of, established at Almería (1072-1092), by Hasan Sabáh, missionary and political emissary of the Fátimites, 37; division of, into two parties, (1091), — Nazárians and Mashtálians, 30 note 1, 36; Hasan Sabáh supports the Nazárian cause, and ceases to be a missionary (1094); the Nazárian form of the sect becomes supreme in Persia, 37. See Nazárians.
- ISMÁILISMS: see Ismáilis.
- ISNÁ-AZÁM: Great Name, knowledge of, necessary in High Magic, first possessed by the Prophet Solimán, 143. See Magic.
- ISNÁ'-ASHARÍS: division of Shiáhs, also known as Twelvers, believe in twelve Imáms, 47; supporters of Músi Kázim the seventh Imám, 30 note 1.
- ITIMADKHAN: (1654), 10.
- IZNÍ: office in a brotherhood of beggars, 10. See Beggars.
- IZNÍ: male inviter, 112.
- IZZ-UD-DIN: name of a head Mulla of Dáddi Bohorás (1817), 31 note 4.
- JAÁFAR: Shirázi, Sayad. See Ahmed Jaáfar Shirazi.
- JAÁFAR MUTHANNA: Fayad, ancestor of the Bukháris, 6 note 1 (1).
- JAÁFAR SÁDIK: sixth Shiáh Imám, his death (765), dispute for the succession among his heirs, 30 note 1, 47; 126 note 2.
- JAÁFARI BOHORÁS: see Bohorás.
- JACKSON: Mr. A. M. T., 10 note 4.
- JAHÁNGÍR: Mughal emperor, exerts to spread Islám (1618), 5, 125; persecutes (1618) Ahmedábád Jains, 5 note 3.

- JAHEZ: wife's property, goes with her own divorce, 105 note 2.
- JAICHAND: Rāja of Kanauj, takes to wife an Afghan woman who causes his death, 39.
- JAINS: Ahmedābād, persecuted by Emperor Jahangir (1618), 5 note 3.
- JAIPUR: conquest of, by Muhammad, son of Kāsim, 1 note 1.
- JALĀLUDDIN AKBAR: Emperor Akbar, 10.
- JAMĀL PATTRI: Sayad, ancestor of Kādiri, Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (2).
- JAMĀR-KUĀNA: assembly lodge of Khojās, 45.
- JAMMAN JATI: Hindu-Muslim saint of northern India, 17.
- JAMA MOSQUE: 38. See Vosques.
- JĀN SĀHEB: great Urdu poet, author of the Heklatāh Zabān, 130 note 2.
- JANĀZAH: bier, 168 note 6. Title of the hymn written by Imāmshāh of Pirana, 40.
- JAZIRAH: Arabic term for island, 1 note 1.
- JESUS: 3 note 3.
- JEWS: among early Arabs, 1 note 1.
- JHOLI: see Tylio-gathering wallet.
- JHUGHĀRKHĀN: ṭīdī Gujarāt noble, kills Chāngizkhān, 12.
- JHUNJHUNA: Fiddis' rattle, 12 and note 2.
- JINDARĀNS: class of foreign Pathāns in Pālinpur, hold lands under military tenure, 8 note 3.
- JOHN: son of Zacharias, 3 note 3.
- JOKEHĀNS: leechmen, 84. See Turki Hajams.
- JUDGE: High Court, Sulaimani Bohora, 33.
- JULWAN: unveiling of the bride, 164.
- KĀABA: 171.
- KABIR-UD-DIN: Pīr, fourth Ismāīlīa missionary (1418), visits the Imām at Deilam, 40; 49 note 1.
- KABRĀS: section of Jaāfavi Bohorās, origin of the name, 35.
- KĀBULIS: special community of part foreign descent; Afghan settlers from Kābul; appearance, character, chiefly horse-dealers, Sunni in religion, form a separate community, 13-14.
- KABŪTRIS: Nat women, taking part in acrobatic feats, origin of the name, 89.
- KADESLA: battilo of (636), 1 note 1.
- KADIAS: bricklayers, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunni in religion; followers of the Pirana saint Imām Shāh, 74.
- KĀDIRIS: chief Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (2).
- KĀGHZIS: paper-makers, Hindu converts, Sunni in religion, followers of the Chishtis of Ahmedābād, 73-74.
- KĀHĀNNI: fisherwoman, female inviter, 112.
- KĀKĀPŪRIS: sons of slaves, said to have come from Mārwar, merged into the Bohora community, 62.
- KALANDARS: monks, their initiatory rites, 22. See Beggars.
- KALI: Hindu goddess, 21.
- KALIMAH: profession of faith among Sunnis and Shīās, 46.
- KALYAN: early Arab settlements at, 1 note 1.
- KĀMĀTAS: literal meaning of the name, descendants of Kanauj Brāhmins, worshippers of Bahucheraji, converted by the Emperor Alā'ud-din (1297), worship Bahucheraji, Muslims in name only, 82.
- KAMBU: offshoot of the Afghan stock, 14.
- KANDŪRI: earthen dish etc. See Shanāk.
- KANGNA: wrist bands of the bride and bridegroom, 161.
- KANNAWA: converted Sindh Lohina; carries Memans to Bhuj at the invitation of Rāo Kheṅgar (1548-1584); is honoured with the title of 'Shet' or Squire by the Rāo, 51.
- KANOF BRAHMAN: worshippers of Bahucheraji, converted to Islam by Alā'ud-din, 82.
- KARANTHAN: village eight miles south of Ahmedābād, shrine of Imāmshāh at, 3 note 3.
- KARĀLIAS: potters, converts from the Hindu caste of Kumbhars, Sunnis in name, 36.
- KARBALA: place of Shīah pilgrimage, 12 note 3; 30; 47; 126; 171; martyrs of, 123; 133, 138; story of the massacre at, 139.
- KARIM-UD-DIN: father of Imāmshāh of Pirana, 3 note 3.
- KARNATIANS: followers of saint Ahmed of Nahrin; derivation of the name; origin of the sect; principal tenets of the sect; spread of the doctrines of, east to India and west to Africa and Spain; in the west the sect dies of inauition, in the east destroyed by Mahmūd Ghaznavi and Muhammad bin Sām (1175), 3 note 3 continued on page 4.
- KĀSĀRS: butchers, believe themselves of Rajpūt origin, two classes of, Sunnis in religion; form a separate community, 74 75.
- KASHĀTIS: town-holders, of part foreign descent, 15; Rajpūt converts; origin of, 64; classes of, of Dholka, 61 note 3; appearance of, character of, Sunnis in religion, 64; marriages of, names and out-come of, 65.
- KĀSIN: nephew of Husain bridegroom-elect of Bakīnah, daughter of Husain; slaughter of, spirit of, believed to possess the dulas in Muharram, 138.
- KATHIARĀS: fuel-sellers, Hindu converts, 87.
- KĀTHĀWĀNS: Arab fleet sent against the coast of (768-778) 1 note 1; Memans in, 51.
- KATLI IMĀM ALI: Shīah holiday, 140.
- KĀZI: office of, functions of, under Muhammadan rule; present functions of, position of, among the community, 135; office of, in Surat, Broach, and Ahmedābād, 135 note 2. See Registrar, Religious officers.
- KERVĀDA: Thakor of, 68.
- KHĀDIMS: disciples, 19. See Beggars.
- KHĀJĀH: see Khwājāh.
- KHĀLĪFĀNS: Umayyad, of Damascus, hostility of, towards Ali's family, 47 note 1.
- KHĀN: title among Pathāns, 11.
- KHĀNA: evening meal, 109.
- KHĀNĀH: Khojāh religious lodge, first establishment of, by Pīr Ṣadr-ud-din, 40.
- KHĀNĀM: title of Mughal women, 9.
- KHĀRĀDIS: turners, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunnis in faith, 75.
- KHĀTĪAS: Muslims of special community of part foreign descent, 11, 15.
- KHĀTĪS: Preacher, duties of, 133. See Preacher, Religious officers. [of, 75.]
- KHĀTKIS: tanners, Hindu converts; two classes

- KHATNA: circumcision, rite of, 100 and note 3. See Customs.
- KHATTA: dish, public dinners called after; east of, 113, 114 and note 1.
- KHATTĀB: father of Khalīfāh Umar, 1 note 1.
- KHĀTŪ: see Khātūn.
- KHĀTŪN: title of Pathān women, 11.
- KHEDA: money subscription among Memans, 57.
- KHENGAR: Rāo, of Kaehh (1549-1584) invites the Sindh Memans to come and settle at Bhuj; honours the head of the Memans with the title of 'Shet' or Squire, 61.
- KHILĀPHAT: see Fātimate Khilāfat.
- KHILJIS: special community of part foreign descent, 11, 15.
- "KHINO"-RIDER: the, plants the banner of Islām on Tārāgdh the hill fort of Ajmir, 6 note 1 (7).
- KHIZR: Khwāj th, water-spirit, also called Prophet Elias, offerings made to, 152, 158 and note 3.
- KHOJAH: Turkish title, 36 note 1. See Khwājah.
- KHOJĀHS: Hindu converts to the Nazārian division of the great Ismā'ili sect; literal meaning of—honourable converts; settlements and divisions of, 36; first conversions of, by Nūr Satgur, in Gujārāt during the time of Solāhki Bhīm II. (1179-1242), 38; conversions of, in Kaehh and Kithlāwār (1200) by Ramdē, a converted Tuvār Rajpūt, 40; additions to the community of, from the converted Lohitān tribe of the Afghāns (1430); from the converted Chāks of Kashmir (1496), 39; conversions of Kithlāwār Lohānas by Pīr Dādū (1549); conversions at Bhuj, by Pīr Dādū, 41; khānah or religious lodge of, first established by, and tythe-gathering first introduced among, by Pīr Sadr-ud-dīn (1430), theory of the awā'id of the gods of the Hindu Pantheon introduced among, by Pīr Sadr-ud-dīn, 40; scriptures of, 40-41; Agha Khān, the religious head of the, 41; appearance of, 42; dress of, 42-44; ornaments, character, and calling of, 44; customs among,—chhatti or six-day celebration among, 44; marriage, 45; death, 46; follow the Hindu law of inheritance, 47; religion of, 46-49; form of worship, 48; prayers, counting the names of the pirs, the aserament or heart-prayer; taxes paid by, 49; holidays observed by, 49-50 and note 1.
- KHOKHARS: Rajpūt converts of the Khokhar tribe; derivation of the name of, origin of, mention of, in Aṭa-i-Akbari, in the Tārīkh-i-Alāi, in Tabakāt-i-Nāshi; claim Afghān extraction, said to have been represented in Afghānistān by the existence of a Kheyl (tribe) of the name of, 65.
- KHONDĀMIR: Sayad, companion of Sayad Muhammad Jannpuri, his defeat by Muzaffar II., 63.
- KHORĀSNI: soldiers, 2 note 3.
- KHUVIS: subscription among Dāūdī Bohorās, 33 and note 1.
- KHUTBAH: sermon, 193.
- KHWĀJAH: Persian form of the Turkish word khejdāh, meaning of, 36 note 1; title, literal meaning of, given to Brahama-Kshatris on their conversion to Islām, 39.
- KIRĀN-US-SĀDĀIN: historical work, 10 note 3.
- KIRDIAS: special community of part foreign descent, 11, 15.
- KIRMAN: passage to India, through, 1 note 3.
- KUMĀRPALA: Anahilavāda king, said to have been converted to Islām, 26 note 2.
- KUMĀRPALOHARITA: written about 1150, 24 note 3.
- KURĀSH: family of Shaikhs, three branches of,—Abbāsīs, Fārūkis, Siddikīs, 8; name of the noble Arab tribe, Prophet Muhammad belonged to; tribal name assumed by Hindu and other converts to Islām, 8 note 3. Special community of part foreign descent, 11, 15.
- KUTUB-DĪN: Kihak, invader of Gujārāt (1104), 2 note 2; conqueror of the Khokhars (1202), 65.
- KUTUB-D-DĪN: Shīkh missionary (1400), ancestor of the Pīrāna saints, Sāiāh faith spread by, in Gujārāt, 125.
- KUTBI ALAN SHAH SHEIKH JIVA: a saint, 63.
- LAD: lip saliva of a Pīr or saint, 127 note 2.
- LADOUR: classes of Hindu converts connected with, 85-90. See Banjārās, 45; Chātlās, Chhāras, Dhādhoyās, 56; Gorkhādīs, Kithlānas, Māchhis, 57; Malīs, Majārās, Nāgorīs, Nats, 58; Pakhālīs, Shisbahgars, 59; Thorīs, 90.
- LAHURAGADH: Brahama-Kshatris fly to, 39.
- LĀ-ILĀHA-ILĀLLĀH: tenet of the Faith, 169.
- LĀKHNAV: the elegy singers of, 133.
- LAND: classes of Hindu converts connected with, mostly cultivators, from Rajpūt and Koli castes, 58-70. See Behlīs, 58; Village Bohorās, 58-62; Kākāpurīs, Gāmetīs, 62; Gīrmedhīs, 62-64; Kashātīs, Makānas, 65; Malīs, 66; Mathā Kambīs, 66-67; Mokenāms, Pārmās, 68; Rāthorīs, Samās, Shaikh-dās, 69; Solāhīs, Sumās, Tānks, 70.
- LANGHĀS: singers. See Mīrs.
- LĀVA: son of Rāma, said to be the founder of the Rāthor tribe of Rajpūts, 39.
- LĀXAT ALI: Manlavi, takes part in the 1857 mutiny, travels in Gujārāt as Wahhābī missionary after the mutiny, makes many converts, is arrested and transported for life, 13; 175.
- LING FRUIT: (Kandūrī), its holiness, 151 note 1.
- LIVING: Musalmān style of,—Houses, 91-95; servants, 96-97; animals, 97-99; dress, 100-108; food, 108-116.
- LOHĀNAS: Kādhādīs, conversions by Pīr Dādū of, to the Khojāh sect, 41. Panjāb, the Afghān tribe of, legendary origin of, conversions of, into the Khojāh sect, 39. Sindh, nukhs or divisions of, 60 note 4; conversions by Edūf-ud-dīn of, to the Sunni faith, form a community of Memans, 50-51. See Khojāhs and Memans.
- LOTJIS: 28 note 1. See Dāūdī Bohorās.
- LOVĀNS: Blacksmiths, immigrants from Sindh, Sunnis in faith, 75.
- LUTFULĀH: Khan, Munshi, Mr., 25 note 2.
- LUTFULĀH: Fazl, Khān Bihldar, 58 note 2.

- MALOHNIS: fishermen, Hindu converts of Bhoi and Khārva castes, two divisions of,—the Inland and the Coast; of the coast, go on long voyages; Sunnis in faith, separate classes of the two divisions of; 87.
- MACHULIS: Nat women, take part in acrobatic feats, meaning of the name of, 89. See NAT.
- MADARIS: homeless wandering beggars, origin of the name of: their peculiar way of asking alms, 22-23. Hindu converts, wandering tribe of players, followers of saint Shāh Madār, worship of Musalmān saints, and Hindu gods, Sunnis in name, follow Hindu customs, and form a separate community, 171.
- MADINAH: Sunni place of pilgrimage, 47; 56, 171.
- MAGRIB: prayer at dusk, 49; 126 note 3.
- MAGIANS: among early Arabs, 1 note 1.
- MAGIAN ELEMENT WORSHIP: 20.
- MAGIC: Belief in, 56; 142. Practice of, forbidden by the Kurān; resorted to chiefly by women; its aims; first teachers of,—Hārūt and Mārūt; 142-143; two kinds of,—Ithnāni or Divine and Shaitāni or satanic; subdivisions of the Divine,—Ulvi, the high and Sufi, the low; High magic is commoner, requires ceremonial purity and is practised by good men for good ends; consists in the knowledge of Ismī Aẓam; the knowledge of the name first known to the Prophet Muḥimān; other charmed words and names possessing magical powers, 143-144; performances of 'Chirālā to secure efficacy in the art of, 144; Satanic or black magic strictly forbidden, depends on the agency of good and evil spirits, requires impurity of body and mind, Gujarāt ways of acquiring it more grotesque than the Arabian; Diwālī timo (Hindu Kārtika) when all evil spirits are free to revisit their earthly haunts, chosen to learn; 146.
- MANDAVI: a schism of Sunni, Sayads followers of, Rājō Shalāh, the chief leader of, the Gujarāt followers of, chief quarters in Gujarāt of, 6 note 1 continued on page 7. See Ghermehdis.
- MANDI OR MEHDI: the coming Imām, the last of the Imāms, 40, 49; title claimed by Fayad Muhammad Jaunpuri, 3 note 3, 62; by Obeidullāh, 48; by a Sunni Bohora Abd-ur-Rehman, 60 note 4.
- MANDI: Al, title of Obeidullāh, 48.
- MANUSH: the Prophet introduced as, 40. See Avatars.
- MAHMUD II.: (1536-1554), Sultan of Ahmed-ābād asserts to spread Islām by force, 5 and note 2; persecutes Bohorās, 27 note 1; 58 note 2.
- MAHMUD BEGADA: (1459-1519), Sunni sovereign of Gujarāt, brings learned men into Gujarāt to spread Islām (1471), 3 note 3; 5 and note 2, 125; receives Imāmshāh, 40; conversions of Bohorās, 58 note 2; of Rajpūts into Molesalāms, 69; of Mulkani Mochis, 77; in the reign of; conversion of Samra Rajpūts (1473) by, 70.
- MAHMUD GHAZNI: invades Gujarāt (1025), 2 and note 2; in Gujarāt (1023-1025), 61; converts Rajpūts of North Gujarāt, called Maliks (1025), 3 note 3; expels Karmatians from Multān, 3 note 3, 38; converts a tribe of Bhātī Rajpūts, 81.
- MAJOR: 14 note 3.
- MAKASTUR: near Cawnpur, tomb of saint Badī-ud-din Madārshāh at, 22; 64.
- MAKAN: Sunni place of pilgrimage, 30; 47; 56; 126; 171; temple at, captured by Śadu Wabbābi (1503), 12 note 3. Wall in a mosque, 131.
- MAKRANTS: foreigners from the Makran coast, watchful husbands, Sunnis by faith, 13.
- MAKTAB: Mulla's school, 132.
- MAKTUM: elected Imāms of the Ismāīliya, 48.
- MAKWANAS: special community of part foreign descent, 11; Hindu converts from Makwana tribe of Rajpūts or Kotis, marriages among, distinct community of, Sunnis in faith, 65-66.
- MALABAR: coast of, Arabs on, 1 note 1.
- MALAKSHAH (1070-1092), Saljuki Emperor, 37.
- MALCOLM: Sir John, 29 note 1.
- MALIS: gardeners, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, 88.
- MALIK: Sunni Imām, 123 note 2, 126.
- MALIK AMBAR: of Ahmednagar, his epithet, 12. See Sidis.
- MALIKI: one of the four Sunni schools, 126 note 1.
- MALIKS: Rajpūt converts, 66; the name coined by Musalmān governors, 15; conversion of, by Mahmud Ghazni (1025), 3 note 3.
- MALIK-UT-TUJJAR: chief of the merchants; title, 3 note 1.
- MALKHET: in the Dakkan, capital of the Rāshtrakūtas, 2 note 1.
- MALĀ: lady's maid, 96.
- MANCHARAM: Brahman of Norvi, converted by Mahmud Begada; Śārod Bohorās claim descent from, 58 note 2.
- MANDVI: near Surat, Sunni Bohora disturbance at, 60 note 4.
- MANDVI: former seat of the head Mulla of Dūdī Bohorās at, 81 note 4.
- MANEKJI: head of eighty-four nulhs or divisions of Hind Lohānās converted to Islām by Eusuf-ud-din, 50-51.
- MANIANS: ivory banglemakers, Hindu converts, their reverence for saint Shāh Alam, Sunnis in faith, 76-77.
- MANSUR: Sufi or freethinker, his full name and title, his crucifixion; followers of, in Gujarāt 35 note 1.
- MANSURAH: kingdom of, in India, foundation of, destruction of, 3 note 3 continued on page 4.
- MANSURIS: followers of Mansur, 35 note 1. See Mansur.
- MARANAS: corn-weigher, Hindu converts, 88.
- MARJIS: Hopefull, followers of Nāsibis, 38.
- MARKABKHAN: Sindhi ruler of the Samma dynasty, converted to Islām by Eusuf-ud-din, 50 and note 3.
- MARRIAGE: ages of boys and girls in; betrothals, 162; fore-observances in, 163-164; bari or sākak and fahar presents in, pro-

- cession in, 165; ceremony in, 166; after-observances of, costs of, 167. See Customs.
- MANSHUKHÂN: elegy-singer, found among Shiâhs only; qualifications of, singing of elegies at Mulurram by; Lakhau, 133. See Elegy-singer, Religious officers.
- MÂNÛT: angel of high estate, first teacher of magic, his trial in the world, his eternal damnation, 142-144. See Magic and Hârut.
- MARX: Virgin, 127.
- MASALÂS: orders from Law, 131 note 1.
- MASHÂIKH: grade of Mulla, 32. Religious guide of Moauâs, his tomb at Ahmedâbâd, 76 note 2.
- MASHÂL: torch, uses of, 96.
- MASHÂLCHI: light-bearer, 96.
- MASHU HADIS: chief Sayad family in Gujurât, 6 note 1 (5).
- MASHUKS: 89. See Pakhâlis.
- MASHIDS: mosques, description of, 131; the best specimens of, at Ahmedâbâd, Cambay, Pâtan, and Rânder, 131 note 1. See Religious Buildings.
- MASHÂNS: Madmen, 34. See Rasûlshahis.
- MASÛDÎ: Al (916), 1 note 1; 2 note 1.
- MÂTARANTHIS: Shakti-worshipping Lohânâs, 40, 48.
- MATIA KANTIS: settlements of; descendants of Hindu Deva Kanhi converts; followers of Pîrâna saint Imâm Shâh; devotion of, to Sindshâh, Pîrzâda of Burhânpur, 66; blind belief of, in the spiritual guide; revolt of Broach Matias (1691); cultivators, follow Hindu customs, form a distinct body, 67-68.
- MAULA: lord and master, believed to be the derivation of the name Moksalâm, 68.
- MAULÂIS: followers of Ali. The Upper Indus Valley followers of His Highness the Agha Khân, 96 note 3.
- MAULAVI: Law Doctor, position and accomplishments of, 133; duties of, as a doctor of Muhammadan law, as a religious teacher, as a professor, as a spiritual guide, 131; as a curer of diseases; remuneration of, for several duties, 136; sometimes a Hâfiz or repeater of the Kurân by heart, 134; representatives of the great preachers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, 133 note 2. See Law Doctor and Religious Officers.
- MAULÛD: nativity hymn, 131 note 2. Muhammad-mas carols, 165.
- MAULÛD: holiday on the 17th of the third month of the Muhammadan year, 140.
- MAULÛDIAS: Arab nativity hymn-singers, 165.
- MAZUN: grade of Mullas, 32.
- MEALS: number and time of, kinds of food served at, 109; forms and ceremonies observed at, 111-112.
- MEHMOU-R-ÂLAM: grandson of Shâh Âlam, 6 note 1 (5).
- MENDATIS: see Ghermehdis.
- MENDI: Al, twelfth Shiâh Imâm, 125 note 2.
- MENDER: wedding gift or dower, 166 and note 1.
- MESHEB MISL: marriage portion of a girl, 166 note 1.
- MENRÂS: arched niche in a mosque, 131 and note 3.
- MELZIGFRIS: trace of the Arabs in the word, 1 note 1.
- MELVILLE: Mr., 65 note 1; 77 note 1.
- MIRANS: properly Mûmîns or Believers; Hindu converts from Sindh Lohânâs and Kâthilwar Kâchhîs; subdivisions of; first conversion of Sindh Lohânâs by Eusûf-ud-dîn Kâdîrî (1421); 50-61; change of the name; arrival of Sindh Memans at Bhuj at the invitation of Râo Khengâr (1549-1584); muster strong in Sûrat (1580-1683); famine of 1813 disperses them to Bombay and other places; settlements of, 51; appearance of, 52; character of, 52-53; dress of, 53-55; food of, 55; in inheritance follow the Hindu law, 56; beliefs and religion of, 56-57; calling of, 57.
- MIRCHANIANS: Musahmân, employed by Hindu chiefs, 2 note 3; rise of Arab, against the British (1602); Persian, 3 note 2; Baluch and Pathân, 64.
- MIMRA GURJANA: Sumrâs said to belong to, 70. See White Hînga.
- MILKMAN: see Dûdwalâs.
- MIMNAR: pulpit in a mosque, 131.
- MIRÂS: foreign tribe, Kasbîs trace descent from, 15. Class of Dholka Kasbâtis, 64 note 3.
- MIRÂS-UT-SIRÂS: author of the Tâbakât-i-Nâsirî, 38.
- MIR: a Sayad title, 7.
- MIRAN SAYAD ALI DÂTÂN: saint, claims descent from Azud-ud-dîn, Fami Kasbâti, 64; spirit-searing tomb of, at Unjha. visited by Memans, 66, and others, 128; rites of spirit-searing practised at, 128-129; leaves of the tree near his tomb are believed to cure diseases, 128; to favour conception, 148. See Ehrens and Vows.
- MIRÂSIS: landlords. See Mîrs.
- MIRÂT-I-AHMADI: 3 notes 1, 3; 6 note 1; 8 note 3; 24 note 2; 25 notes 1, 2; 26 note 1; 31 note 2; 35 note 1; 66 and note 5; 82.
- MIRÂT-I-SIKANDARI: 8 note 3; 62; 63; 70.
- MIRDUAS: special community of part-foreign and part-Rîjpūt descent, 11, 18; derivation of the name of, 18 note 2; official spies under Native Rulers, 18.
- MIR KHOND: 37 note 5.
- Mîrs: nobles, Hindu converts, 83; meaning of the name, 63 note 1; singers and players by profession, followers of Dîda Mîrân; called also Dholis, Doms, Langhâs, Mîrsâs, 83.
- MIRZA: title among Mughals, 9.
- MIRZÂS: Timurian princes, shelter given to by Gujurât Sulân Bahâdurshâh (1632); many Gujurât Mughal families claim descent from, 9; sons of Sulân Husain of Khurâsân, shelter given to by Chingîzkhân (1571); spread over Gujurât, 10.
- Mîrs: black dentifrice, origin of the use of, 43 note 1; held in high respect, 52 note 3; 42; 52; 149; 162.
- MISSIONARIES: Muhammadan, in Gujurât, 3; 126; Abdullâh, of the Mastâshian sect, his converts chiefly Bohorâs, 3 note 3, 26, 126. Eusuf-ud-dîn Kâdîrî, Sayal, his converts chiefly Memans, 50, Imdâshâh or Imâm-ud-

- dīn, of the Nazārian sect, his converts chiefly Matia Kanbis and Momnās; 3 note 3, 40, 66; 76. Muhammad Jaunpuri, Sayad, chief conversions to Mohdavi faith, 3 note 3, 62. Muhammad Ali, Mulla, 20 note 1. Muhammad-dīn Chishti, 3 note 3, 6 note 1 (4). Nūr Salāḡur, of the Nazārian sect, his converts chiefly Khojals, 33. Sadr-ud-dīn, 40. Shams-ud-dīn, 39. Shāh A'lam, 3 note 3. Shāh Tahir, 3 note 3, 125.
- MOCHIS: Multāni, shoemakers from Multān, arrival of, in Gujarāt from North India, conversion of, during the reign of Mahmūd Begada (1459-1513), appearance, dress, occupation of, 77-78. See Multānis.
- MOLFSALĀMS: Rajpūt holf converts, their conversion in the reign of Mahmūd Begada, (1459-1513); interpretations of the name of, Thākors and Chiefs; marriages among, 5 note 2; 23 note 1; 68.
- MOXNĀS: properly Momins, that is Believers, 76; offshoot of the main Nazārian stock, 67; conversion of, by Ismaili Sayads and Imām-shāh of Mirāna, 76 and note 1; divisions of; rising of (1691); appearance and dress of, 76; religion, customs, and community of, 77; religious disciples of the Mirāna Pirs, 3 note 3 continued on page 4; 40; 127 note 2.
- MOXGAL: 10 note 3. See Mughals.
- MOVOPORES: in art, 123.
- MOONS: class of traders at Basscin, 16; at Surat, 15 note 2.
- MOSQUES: see Masjid.
- MOTAS: hind Lohānas, 50 note 4; 51.
- MOORNING: form of, 170-171.
- MUTANĀS: see Memans.
- MULĀHIZ BĀNĪ: lieutenant of the viceroy of Gujarāt, puts down Matia Kanbi revolt, 67.
- MUGHĀIRĀH: ancestor of the Nāḡata emigrants, 14 note 3.
- MUGHĀLS: derivation of the name, 10 note 3, the two distinct classes of,—Persian and Indian or Chinghadā; Persian Mughals are descendants of Persian political refugees and merchants and of the Shīah persuasion, Indian Mughals are descendants of the Mughol conquerors of India and Sunni by faith; titles before and after the names of, 9-10.
- MUHAMMAD: title among Shīahs, 8.
- MUHAMMAD: son of Abdul-Wāhhab, 12 note 3. See Wāhhabis.
- MUHAMMAD: son of Kāsim, his conquest of Jāipur, Udaipur, and Chitor, 1 note 1 continued on page 2.
- MUHAMMAD: Sayad, styled Rājo Shnhid, the martyr, arrives in Gujarāt, preaches Mahdavi doctrines, is killed in a skirmish with the troops of the viceroy Amrugsib, 6 note 1 continued on page 7, 35 note 1.
- MUHAMMAD: Sayad, companion of Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri; Palonpur and Dakhan Haidarabad Mahdavis claim descent from, 63.
- MUHAMMAD ALI: Mulla, believed to be the first Bohora missionary, works miracles and makes converts in Cambay; shrine of, at Cambay, 20 note 1.
- MUHAMMAD ALI: Pasha of Egypt, defeats Abdul Wāhhab (1812), 12 note 3.
- MUHAMMAD BAKR: fifth Shīah Imām, 125 note 2.
- MUHAMMAD GHORI: represses the Karmatians (1176), 3 note 3 continued on page 4; 38.
- MUHAMMAD JAUNPURI: Sayad, Mahdavi missionary, comes to Gujarāt (1509); claims to be the Imām Mehdi; works miracles; gathers followers, 3 note 3, 62-63.
- MUHAMMAD MURĀDShĀH: Sayad, ancestor of the Mash-hodi Foyad family, 6 note 1 (6).
- MUHAMMAD SĀH: Pīr, tomb of, at Ahmed-ābād, 35.
- MUHAMMAD TĀJ: Manikna, head of the law-dctors of Isām at Ahmedābād, 63.
- MUHAMMAD ŪRĪ: (1211), 2 note 3.
- MUHAMMAD ZAMĀN: Mirza, finds shelter (1532) under Bahādur Shāh of Gujarāt, 9.
- MUHAMMAD: first month of the Musalmān year, sacred to the memory of Hasan and Husain, 136; season of keen grief and self-denial, 126, ceremonies performed and observances practised in, 137-139. Vows made to Tāziāhs and other institutions of, 128, 129-130; feasts in, 31 note 3, 114; recital of the Karbala massacre in, 132; elegy-singing in, 133.
- MUNIR-YUD-DĪN: of Amroha, 130 note 1. See Sheikh Fadda.
- MUN-UD-DĪN CHISHTI: saint, first missionary to settle in India (1165), ancestor of the Chishti Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (4); makes many converts at Ajmir, 3 note 3; founds Chisht, a Sufi or mystic school, 8 note 3; reverence of Husaini Brāhmins for, 22.
- MU'IZZ AL, fourth Fātimite Khalifāh of Egypt, 48.
- MUJĀWAR: beadle, 128; 131, duties and remuneration of, 131 note 2; 132. See Religious officers.
- MURĀSIR: grade of Mulla 32.
- MULĀHIDĀH: heretics of Hindustān, led astray by Nur the Turk, 38.
- MULLA: religious and social head of Dāddi Bohorās; chief Mulla called Dāi; his headquarters at Surat, 31; seats of the former headquarters of, chief Mullas from (1785-1893), 31 note 4; his influence and power over the community; his sources of income; subordinate grades of, earn their own livelihood, 32-33. One of the lowest subordinate grades of Mulla, college at Surat, and schools to train youths for the duties of, 32. One of the lowest orders of religious officers, the Musalmān priest, his qualifications, his duties at the mosque, earns his livelihood as a schoolmaster and adds to his income by making amulets and dealing in charms &c., 132-133. See Priest, Religious officers.
- MULTĀN: kingdom of, in India, foundation of, by the Karmatians, destruction of, 3 note 3 continued on page 4, 38; battle of, 58.
- MULTĀNIS: see Mochis.
- MUNOHIRAS: see Rafāis. [ing.]
- MUNH DĀNKNA: face-hiding, 170. See Monr-
- MUNIPHODĀS: see Rafāis.
- MURĀS: disciples of the Shīah Mullas; of the Sunni Pirzādah or murshid; initiation of, by a Sayad Pīr, 127 and note 2.

- MURSHIDS: an order of teachers in a beggar brotherhood, duties of, 10. Spiritual guide, 127 and note 2. See Pir.
- MURTUZA ALI: first Shi'ah Imám, 125 note 2.
- MÚSA: patron saint of the Músa Suiyágs, used to dress in woman's clothes, famous anger, said to have saved the country from famine by his prayers, tomb of, at Ahmedábád; champa or melichia tree near the tomb of, 23 and note 2.
- MÚSA SUIYÁGS: beggars, Hindu converts, followers of saint Músa, dress like married women, remain unmarried, 23 and note 1.
- MÚSI KÁZIN: son of the sixth Shi'ah Imám Jafar Sádik, his dispute with his nephew Isma'il for the Imámate, his supporters known as Isna-ashari, 30 note 1; seventh Shi'ah Imám, 125 note 2.
- MÚSI RAZÁ: eighth Shi'ah Imám, 125 note 2.
- MUSIO: 174 and note 1. See Amusements.
- MUSTAALIANS: division of the great Isma'ili sect of Shi'ahs; called after Almusta'ali, son of Almústausirbilláh, Khalifáh of Egypt (1094); sect represented in India by Bohorás; Abdulláh, the principal missionary of, 24, 26, 30 note 1.
- MUTAWALLI: mosque guardian, duties of, 131, 132. See Religious officers.
- MUWALLIDS: country-horn, 11: 15.
- MUZAÁFAR SHOLA: sweet dish, 113.
- MUZAFFAR I.: governor of Gujarát (1391), brings Sunni priests to spread Is'á'n, conversion of Pátan Shi'ah Bohorás to Santál faith by the priests, 26 note 1, 34; brings more priests (1395), 3 note 3; encourages the spread of Sunni doctrines, 27; 58 note 2; 125.
- MUZAFFAR II.: Ahmedábád king (1536-1550), settlement of men of letters from Persia and other places in Gujarát (1513-1523) in the reign of, 3 note 3; persecutes Mahdavis, 63; 126.
- MUZBI: special holiday dish of Arabs, 16.
- NAGAR-THATHA: capital of Káindh (1421), 50.
- NAGORIS: Hindu converts, come from Nágor in Máhwa, mostly cart drivers, form a community; Pálanpur section of, have taken to arms, surnames of, fond of giving public dinners, 88.
- NAGOSHIS: see Bohorás.
- NAHRWÁLA: 2 note 1. See Anahilwáda.
- NÁIATIS: also called Nawáits, shipmen, came to India in the eighth or ninth century from Arabia, their disappearance from Gujarát, their traces in Ghoghá lancers, found on the coast of Kánara and the Konkan under the name of Nawáitájs; their origin; claim to have proselytised one of the Zamorins of Malabar, 14 and note 3, 15 and notes 1, 2.
- NAJM-UD-DIN: head Mulla of Dáúdí Bohorás (1785), (1842), 31 note 4.
- NÁKHUDA: Musalmán naval captain, in service of the ruler of Somnáth, 2 note 3.
- NÁKÍB: office in a mendicant brotherhood, 19. See Izni and Beggars.
- NAKSHBANDS: mark-makers, Hindu converts, beggars, followers of saint Baháud-din.
- Nakshband, their reverence for fire, 20. See Beggars.
- NÁLBANDS: horse shoers, Hindu converts, 78.
- NÁL SÁHEN: Lord Horse-shoe, the cast shoe of the horse of the bridegroom-elect of Husain's daughter, believed to possess power to work cures, imitation horse shoes carried by Dulás or bridegrooms in Múhararram, 133. See Dúlas.
- NAMAK-CHASHI: 153. See Salt-tasting.
- NAMÁZGÁN: see Iltgahs.
- NAMRS: peculiarity of, among Arabs, 18; Bohorás, Dáúdí, 31 and note 1, Jáfari, 33; Village, 59 note 1, 60; Ghánchis, 73; Káshá-tis, 65; recommended by the Prophet, 150 note 2.
- NÁMING: rites and ceremonies relating to, 166-157; practice of giving odd names, 150 note 2.
- NÁNJIÁNI: Mr., Sachédina, 36 note 4.
- NANNU MIAN: name of a row-receiving ginn or spirit, 130.
- NÁOS: see Boat-offering.
- NÁSTURS: enemies of Ali; contemptuous term for Eunnis, 38, 47, note 3.
- NATS: Tumblers, wandering tribe of Hindu converts from the tribe of the same name, performers of acrobatic feats, peculiar names of their women who take part in the performances, 88-89.
- NÁVÁIATES: see Náiatájs.
- NÁVÁNAGAR: former seat of the head Mulla of Dáúdí Bohorás, 31 note 4.
- NÁWÁITS: see Náiatájs.
- NÁWÁSA: ninth-month celebration or first pregnancy rites, 149.
- NAW SHAHID: nine martyrs, the shrine of, at Surat, 129.
- NAZÁN: son of Khalifáh Almústausir-billáh, supporters to his claims to the succession are called Nazárians after him, 30 note 1, 37. See Nazárians.
- NAZÁRIANS: division of the great Isma'ili sect of Shi'ahs, called after Nazár, son of Almústausir-billáh, Khalifáh of Egypt (1036-1095), 30 note 1; Nazár's cause is espoused in Persia by Hasan Sabáh, missionary and political emissary of the Fátimite Khalifáh of Egypt (1094); become powerful in Persia, 37; change in the doctrines of (1163), 37, 43; transfer of the Imámate from the Fátimites to Hasan Alá-Zikri-his-Salám, the fourth successor of Hasan Sabáh, 48; Alá-Zikri-his-Salám believed to have sent the first Nazárian missionary to India, 33; sect represented in India by the Khojáhs, 30 note 1; conversions made in Gujarát and other parts of India by missionaries of the sect, 33-41; changes made in the doctrines by missionaries to suit Hindu ideas, 40, 48.
- NAZZ: son of Kinánuh, one of the ancestors of the Prophet, one of the Náiatá families claim descent from, 14 note 3.
- NÉZÁS: bamboo lances used by Phadális, 150.
- NIKLAKSI: looked-for tenth incarnation, the coming Mahdi explained to Shaktipantájs as, 40, 48. See Avatáras.
- NIZÁN-UD-DIN: Sháikh, ancestor of the Chishtis, 8 note 2. See Chishtis.

NĀRNA: word possessing special powers, 143. See Magic.
NĀR BAKSH: tribe of the Hindu Kush, identical with the Khojās, 36 note 3.
NĀR SATĀGUR: Ismā'īlī missionary, is believed to have been sent to India by Al-Zikri-his-Sālam, comes to Pātan in Gujarāt in the time of Solāhki Bhīm II. (1170-1242), works miracles and makes many converts, is said to have converted the ruler secretly to his faith; marries a daughter of the Hindu governor of Novsāi, is killed by one of his disciples, 38; is described by the third Ismā'īlī missionary Sadrod-dīn as the incarnation of the Prophet, 40; of Brahma, 48.
NĀRSHAH: see Nūr Satāgur.
NĀRUD-DĪN: see Nūr Satāgur.
NĀRULĀH: Sayad, 27 note 1.
"NŪR THE TURK": probably Nūr Satāgur, believed to have converted the Mulāhidah, 38.
NUZHAT-UL-AKHĀR: historical work, 60 note 2.

OBEDULLĀH: surnamed Al Mahdi (872-934), missionary of Abdullāh Maimūn, founds the Fātemite Khilāfat dynasty in Egypt (910), revealed Imām, 37, 47, 48.
OCCUPATION: followed by men (1872 census), 118-121; by women; monopolies in, 123.
ODHNI UDĀNA: ceremony, performance of, 162 note 1.
OFFICE-BEARERS: in a brotherhood of beggars, 19. See Beggars, Bhondārī, Izni, and Sar-guroh.
OFFICERS: religious, 132-135. See Kāzi, Khattib, Morsāhkhān, Maulavi, Mujāwar, Mulla, and Mutawalli.
OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAIN: title, 37. See Hasan Sabih.
OMAYYAN: ancestor of one of the Nāiotī families, 14 note 3.
OMENS: good and bad, belief in, 22, 30, 145-146.
OPIUM: use of, as intoxicating drug, peculiar names of, takers, 110. See Stimulants.
ORIGIN: of Gujarāt Musalmān population, 1-5.
ORNAMENTS: of men, of the rich, 101 and note 3; of middle class, 102; of the poor, 103; of women, of the rich, 104 and note 2; of the middle class, 106; of the poor, 107; of children, 108.
OVANS: Captain, 59 note 1.
OVINGTON: 5 note 3, 170 note 1.

PAKHĀLIS: water-carriers, also called Mnshkīs and Bhistis, descendants of converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, Sunnis by religion, 89. See Bhistis.
PALITA: 133. See Fotliah.
PĀNDAYAS: described as Ismā'īlī Pontiffs, 43. See Avatārs.
PANDYĀDI JAWĀN MARDI: book of the Indian Khojāh scriptures, written by Agha Abdus Salāmshāh, 41; 48.
PANJĀB: 70. See Takkadesh.
PĀNJNĠGARS: cotton thread starchers, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, form a separate community, 78.

PĀNJNĠGARS: Hīr, silk starchers, have a monopoly in the art, 78.
PANJĀN: 47. See Pentad.
PART: fairy, 142 note 1.
PART-ON-KE-TARAK BHARNA: fairy hīzrāts, 130. See Vows made to Geni.
PARMĀNS: Rojpūt converts, conversions believed to have taken place in 1317; Gujarāt athletes, 68-69.
PĀTAN: capital of Gujarāt (1004-1143), 26; 38; 62. See Anahilvādō.
PĀTANI BOHORĀS: see Jāifari Bohorās.
PATHĀNS: Musolmāns of the regular class, of Afghān origin, derivation of the name of, 10 note 4; titles after the names of, divisions, appearance, and character of, mostly soldiers, Sunnis in religion, 10-11; class of foreign Pathāns known as Jindarans, 8 note 3.
PAVALIĀS: worshippers of the Hindu goddess Bohucharnjī, 32. See Hijdas.
PENTAD: 47. See Paujtan.
PERILLOUS: the, 1 note 1.
PERSECUTIONS: of Bohorās, 27 and note 1; of Mahdavis, 63.
PERSIAN: Gulf, traders from, establish themselves in Gujarāt cities, 2. Refugees, establish themselves at Cambay, 3 note 2.
PETRONI: contribution among Khojās, 49.
PIADĀLIS: spirit musicians, performances of, during Behlīm vow offerings, 150-151; during Boat offerings, 153; during the offerings of vows to geni, 130.
PICTURES: keeping of, prohibited by the Prophet, now common, 93 and notes 1 and 2.
PILGRIMAGES: enjoined by Muslim law, as a duty, 127, 171 note 2; places of, for Sunnis and Shiāhs, 47, 126, 171; for Dāūdī Bohorās, 30; for Memans, 56.
PIKAK: lotus eater, opium-eater, 110.
PIRS: also called Pīrādāhs or Mīrshāds, spiritual guides, 7; religious persons, disciples of, are called Mīrāds, 127; most of the Sayads and Fārūkis Shāikhs become spiritual guides, 7, 8 note 2; initiation of Mīrāds by a Sayad pīr, sources of his income, 127 note 2; spiritual guides of Bohorās, Jāifari, 34; village, 60; of Khojās, 40; of Memans, 51; 66; 134 note 3; Pīrāna, 79, 140; blind belief in, 67 note 1.
PĪRĀNA: village ten miles south-east of Ahmedābād, 76 note 2. Pīr, 79, 110; saints of, 66, 67, 69, 74, 126; Sayads of, 127 note 2, tombs at, 76 note 2.
PĪR-MURĪD: profession of spiritual tutelage practised by Sayads and few Shāikhs, 127 note 2.
PĪR-RAWĀN: shrine of Mulla Muhammad Ali at Cambay, 26 note 1.
PĪRZĀDĀNS: see Pīr.
PLAYERS: see Hijdas.
POPULATION: see Census Details.
PRĀHĀDHĀ: 43. See Binkta.
PRAYERS: enjoined by Muslim law, as a duty, 126, 171 note 2; form, number, time, and place of reading, 47, 49, 116, 126 and notes 2, 3, 5; funeral, 126; (written), put in the hand of a dying Dāūdī Bohorā, 31 and note 2; vow to repeat, 127.

- PREGNANCY: horror felt by Gujarāt Musalmāns at the prospect of leaving no issue, resort to remedies to obtain children, appeals made to saints; Amils or exorcists asked to cast out spirit of barrenness, 147; visit to shrines and trees possessing issue-giving properties, 148; caution taken against the baneful influences from the time of conception, 148-149; rites and ceremonies relating to—seventh and nine month celebration of, 149-150; performance of a Behlīa vow in, 150-151; performance of earthen dish rite or Sahnak in, 151-152; offerings of grass boats or Nāos, 152-153; rite of sex divination by milk in, 153-154.
- PRIEST: Musalmān, 182. See Mulla.
- PROCESSION: of a convert, 136 note 1.
- PROFESSIONS: census details of 1872 of classes following, condition of, 122.
- PROSPECTS: of Gujarāt Musalmān population in general, 176.
- PULAO: dish, public dinner called after, cost of, 118, 114 and note 2.
- PTOLEMY: his map of India (150), 1 note 1.
- RABĪ-UL-AKHIR: see Rabī-us-sāni.
- RABĪ-UL-AWWAL: third month of the Musalmān year, holidays in, 140; sermon dinners given on first twelve days of, 114.
- RABĪ-US-SĀNĪ: fourth month of the Musalmān year, holiday in, 140; feast in, 114.
- RĀDHANPUR: grant of, to Fateh Khān Balūch, 17.
- RĀKĀS: beggars, meaning of the name of, other names of, followers of Sayad Ahmad Kabir, ways of begging, Sunnis in religion, 28-24.
- RĀFIZI: contemptuous term for Shiāhs, 47 note 3.
- RĀI DĀN: Jām, (1454), Sindh ruler of the Samma dynasty, 50. See Markab Khān.
- RĀI-ISFAND: mustard, burning of, at the door to prevent demons from entering, 155.
- RAJAN: sixth month of the Musalmān year, holiday in; preaching of sermons during first eleven nights of, 140; feast given on the last Wednesday of, 114.
- RAJAMANDRI: Rājā of, 2 note 3.
- RĀJO: Enyad, of Bukhāra, 18.
- RĀJO SHĀHID: see Sayad Mhhammad.
- RAMAZĀN: ninth month of the Musalmān year, month of fasting, 115; 126; 141; 171 note 2; first fast of, 161; holidays in, 140; feasts in, 31 note 3, 127; recital of prayers in, 126, 132, 135; 136. Id. see Id.
- RĀMDĀ: converted Tuvār Rajpūt, spreads Islām in Kachh and Kāthiāwār, 40.
- RANGREZ: dyers, said to be converts from Hindū Khatri or weaver caste, Sunnis in religion, 79.
- RĀSHIDKŪTA: dynasty of the ancient Hindū kings of the Dakkhan, 3 note 1. See Balhara.
- RĀS NALA: (Forbes') historical work, 2 note 3; 3 notes 1, 2, 3; 5 note 2; 15 note 3; 25 note 1; 26 note 2; 29 note 1; 58; 64 note 3; 68.
- RĀSTĪSHĀHIS: beggars, followers of the Prophet; also called Mastāns, Sunnis in religion, 24.
- RATANPUR: village in western Rājpipla, tomb of saint Bābā Ghor at, 12.
- RĀTHORS: Rajpūt converts, take wives of Hindū birth, some have reverence for Śva-minārāyan, observe mostly Hindū customs, 69.
- RAYSHAMAS: 39. See Chāks.
- RAVERTY: Major, 65.
- RĀVJI: son of Mānekji the head of Sindh Lohānās, converted to Islām by Eusuf-ad-din, called Ahmed after conversion, 51.
- RAZIAH: Sultānah (1237-1240), 12; 38.
- READING: see Amusements.
- REGISTRAR: see Kazi.
- REHENS: Musalmān foreign tribe, Kasbātīs trace descent from, 15; class of Dholka Kashātīs, 64 note 3.
- RELIGION: Musalmān, two forms of—Sunni and Shiāh, origin and points of difference between the two forms, 47-48, 125-126; Imāms of, 125 note 3, 126; schools of, 126 note 1; schisms from Sunni, Mahdavi, 6 note 1, 35 note 1; and Wahhābīs, 12 and note 1, 13; divisions of Shiāhs—the Isna-Asharis and Ismāīlīs, farther subdivisions of Ismāīlīs into—Nazārīans and Muntazilīans, 30 note 1, spread of the faith in Gujarāt by missionaries and Musalmān rulers, 3-5, 125; leading beliefs and practice of, 126-130; religious buildings, 130-132; religious officers, 132-135; holidays, 136-141; early beliefs, 142-146.
- RESURRECTION: day of, belief in, 126.
- REVOLT: of Matin Kanbis and Momnas, at Broach, 66, 76.
- RĪRĀS: chief Sayad family in Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (3).
- RŌHĀNĪ: divino magic. See Magic.
- RUKUNDDIN-KHUR SHĀH: ancestor of H. II. the Agbā Khān, 41.
- RULERS: Musalmān, spread Islām in Gujarāt by persecution, Muḥmūd Ghazni or Ghaznavi (1025), 3 note 3, 81; Emperor Alā-ud-dīn (1297), 82; governor Alifkhān (1297-1317), 3-5, 125; Muzaḥfar I. (1395), 3 note 3, 129; Sultān Ahmad (1414-1420), 5 and note 2, 25 note 1, 125; Mahmūd Begada (1459-1513), 3 note 3, 5 and note 2, 68, 70, 77, 125; Muzaḥfar II. (1513-1526), 125; Muḥmūd II. (1536-1547), 5 and note 2; Emperor Jahāngīr (1618), 5 and note 3, 125; Emperor Aurangzib, as Viceroys of Gujarāt (1649), 5 and note 3, 125.
- RUSTOM: Persian hero, 136.
- SĀNĀLIĀS: 35; 57. See Dādwalās.
- SĀVĪAN: religion, of early Arabs, 1 note 1.
- SĀVĪHIN: see Seveners.
- SĀOHIN: Sidi State, 12.
- SACRIFICE: 158. See Akka.
- SADDO: Sheikh, name of a row-receiving genl, origin of, 130 and note 1.
- SĀDĪK: Pīr, son of Pīr Dādā, 41.
- SADR-UD-DĪN: Pīr, third Ismāīlī missionary,

- adopts Hindu names, 88 note 7; said to have converted Brahma-Kehatris, 39; founds the first Khānah or Kbojāh religious lodge; tests the faith of his followers; starts the first tythe-gathering wallet; engrafts incarnations on the Ismāīlīa faith to present it in an inviting form to Hindns; introduces himself as incarnation of Brahma, 40; gives his name to the fourth Bhakta; adopts the name of Satpanth for his new faith, 48.
- SAFAR: second month of the Musalmān year, holidays in, 139-140.
- SAHĀRAN: Tānk ancestor of the Gujarāt Sultāns, converted to Islām by Fīrūz Tughlak, 70.
- SAHĪFAT-US-SALĀT: prayer book of the Dāūdī Bohorās, 30 note 1.
- SAHNĀK: also called Bībī-ki-Sahnak and Kandūrī, fulfilment of vow by women to the Lady Fātimah, description of, 151-152. See Earthen Dish.
- SĀRU: Tānk ancestor of the Gujarāt Sultāns, converted to Islām by Fīrūz Tughlak, 70.
- SAIMŪR: probably Cheul, 2 note 1.
- SAINTS: living and dead, appeals of women to, for children, 147; belief in, 17, 22; vows made to, 128; worship of, 12; Abyssinian, 12; of Ahmedābād, 76; of Ajmir, 6 note 1 (4), 22; of Baghdād, 66; of Cambay, 26 note 1; of Gilan, 6 note 1 (2); of Gotarka, 17; Hindu-Musalmān, of Northern India, 17; Madār-shāh, 82; Mūsa, 23; Nakhband, 20; of Pīrāna, 66, 67, 69, 74, 126; of Raffās, 6 note, (8); of Syria, 22.
- SĀIS: groom, 96.
- SAKĪSAH: Lady, daughter of Husain, bride-elect of Kāsim, 138.
- SALĀTS: masons, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name, 79.
- SALE: Mr., his Preliminary discourse to the Kurān, 1 note 1.
- SALĠIRAH: 159 and note 4. See Birthday.
- SALĠIR-UL-CHRIST: sheikh, tomb of, at Fatehpur Sikbri, 147.
- "SALKU": scarification, performance of, in Arabia, 160 note 3 continued on page 161.
- SALT-TASTING: also called Botan and Namak Chashi, rites relating to, 159.
- SAMA: dynasty of Hindh rulers (1351-1531), 50.
- SAMĀS: Hindu converts, origin of, probably a Turk tribe, 69.
- SAMĀDHĪ: Hindu practice of abstraction, practised by Nūr Fatāgūr, 38.
- SAMAROHĀNTĀ: The Holy Drop, 46.
- SĀMBA: son of Krishna, Samās trace descent from, 69.
- SAMI: grant of, to Fateh Khān Bilūch, 17.
- SANKHĀNPUR: village of, sixty miles north-east of Ahmedābād, temple of goddess Behechra at, 21, 82.
- SAR-QURAH: office of a head-teacher in a beggar brotherhood, 19. See Beggare and Office-bearers.
- SARHIND: head-quarters of the high priest of Memans, 57.
- SATANIO: magic, also called Shaitāni, process of acquiring knowledge of, 143. See Magic.
- SATMĀSA: seventh-month celebration during first pregnancy, 140.
- SATPANTH: name given by Pir Sadr-ud-din to his new faith, 48.
- SAYD: Wahhābī leader, rise of Wahhābī power under him, 12 note 3. See Wahhābīs.
- SAYAD: title, 7.
- SAYADS: Musalmān regular class; descendants of Fātimah and Ali; their dislike to intermarry with other communities, 6 note 1, 7; arrival and settlement of in Gujarāt; the ten chief families of, 6 note 1; appearance, titles before or after their names, condition, religion—Sunnīs and Shīahs, Shīah Sayads form a distinct community, 7-8. Beggars of Bahārī stock, 8 note 1. Of Mahdavi faith, 6 note 1 continued on page 7.
- SEKHOOLS: of the Sunni division, 126 note 1.
- SCRIPTURES: belief in, 126.
- SEKRA: flower-sheet, 159, 165.
- SEIF-UD-DIN: chief Molla of the Dāūdī Bohorās (1797), 31 note 4.
- SERVANTS: staff of, in a Musalmān house, 98-97.
- SERVICE: Government and private, followed by Musalmāns, 122. See Occupation.
- SERVICE: classes of Hindu converts connected with: see Belirūpias, Bhāods, 80; Bhatīs, Bhawayyās, Gandhraps, 8; Kamāias, Madaris, 82; Mīrs or Mīrāsīs, Sīpāhīs, 83; Tāshchīs, Turki Hajāms, 84.
- SEVENERS: division of the Shīahs, also called Sābīs and Ismāīlīs, 47. See Ismāīlīs.
- SEX DIVINATION: by milk, ceremony of, 153-154.
- SHAĀBĀN: eighth month of the Musalmān year, holiday in, 116, 140. See Shab-i barāt.
- SHAB-I-BARĀT: night of record, falls on the 14th of ShaĀbān, 115, 140.
- SHĀRĀFI: Sunni Imām, 125 note 2, 126, Sunni school, 126 note 1.
- SHĀH: title among Sayads, 7.
- SHĀH ĀLAM: saint, learned man of Mahmūd Begada's reign, 3 note 3, 76, 148; shrine of, at Ahmedābād, 66.
- SHĀH MADĀR: saint, 82.
- SHĀH NAJAF: Shīah place of pilgrimage, place of Ali's martyrdom, 47, 126.
- SHĀH TĀHIR: Ismāīlīan courtier-missionary, preceptor of Muzaffar II., 3 note 3, 125.
- SHĀHĀB-UD-DIN GHORI: 39. See Muhammad Ghori.
- SHĀHĀN-UD-DIN: Kāzi, Khān Bahādūr, 14 note 3; 19 note 1; 25 note 1; 26 note 1; 27 note 2; 32 note 2; 33 note 2; 33 note 1.
- SHĀHĀDAT: night of the martyrdom, the ninth night of the Mubarram, 129.
- SHĀHVI: Sayad Pir, descendant of Imām-ud-din (1691), spiritual head of Mātīs, commits suicide, 69.
- SHĀIKH: title, 8.
- SHĀIKHS: Musalmāns of the regular class, 6; also include local converts, 8 note 3; meaning of the name, origin, branches, appearance, titles before and after the names of, 8 and notes 2 and 3; 9; Teln division of, in Radhanpur, 8; note 2.
- SHĀIKHĀS: Hindu converts, devotees of the Pīrāna saints, also called Shaikhs, form a distinct community, 69-70. [Shābāh, 37.
- SHĀIKH-UL-JABĀL: title assumed by Hasan

- SHAITANI: form of magic, 143. See Satanic and Magic.
- SHAMS-UD-DIN: second Ismā'īli missionary, also known as Chata, works miracles, makes conversions chiefly from Ghāks, 39 and note 3.
- SHAWWāl: tenth month of the Muslimān year, its first day is the Ramāzān 'īd holiday, 141. See Ramāzān 'īd.
- SHEREDMAKHI: opium eater, 110.
- SHERKHAN SŪR: revolt of, against Humāyun, 9.
- SHI'ĀH: one of the two forms of the Muslimān faith, 123; etymological meaning of, 47 note 1; origin and points of difference of, 46-47, 125-126; Imāms, 125 note 2; divisions of, into Ismā'īshari or Twelvers and Seveners also called Ismā'īlians or Ismā'īlis (765), 80 note 1, 17; further subdivisions of Seveners or Ismā'īlis into Nazārians and Mustā'īlians (1094); Nazārians represented in India by Khojāh, Mustā'īlians by Boharās, 30 note 1; spread of, in Gujarāt chiefly by Ismā'īli missionaries, 24; 125.
- SHIRAZIS: chief Sayad family of Gujarāt, 6 note 1 (C).
- SHISHANGARS: glassmakers, Hindu converts, found chiefly in Kaira district, make glass bottles, &c., 89.
- SHIRADDHA: mind feast, 147.
- SHIRINE: of Abdul Kādīr Gīlāni at Baghaddād, 66; of Ali and Husain, 47; of Mirān Sayad Ali at Unjāh, 56, 123; of Naw Shahīd at Sarat, 129; of Pir-i-Nawan at Cambay, 26 note 1; of Shāh 'Alam at Ahmedābād, 56; of Shams-ud dīn at Uch, 39; of Kindisāh at Navsārī, 66; miniature, of Karbala martyrs, 128. Vows made to visit 128; spirit-expelling element in the, of Mirān Sayad Ali, 128-129.
- SIDDIKIS: section of Shaikhs, 8 and note 3. See Shaikhs.
- SIDHUR: former seat of the head Mulla of the Dādī Bahorās at, 31 note 4.
- SIDDHĀS JATISINGI: king of Anahilavāda, gives justice to Muslimān traders of Cambay, 2 note 3; gives patronage to Bohora missionary, said to have embraced Islām, 26 note 2.
- SIFIS: Muslimāns of special community of part foreign descent, also called Habashis, origin, divisions, language, character of, 11; special form of worship among, dance of, mode of position and power among, rulers, 12. Zanjira, arrival and settlement at Surat of, 3.
- SINDHĀS: probably in Kachh, 1 note 1; masquas at, 2 note 1.
- SINDHUSĀN: probably Nur Satāgur, shrine of, at Navsārī, 66.
- SIRĀNIS: soldiers, of mixed origin, partly immigrants and partly Rajpūt converts, mostly husbandmen, Sunni in religion, 83-84; name coined by Muslimān governors for Rajpūt and other converts, 25.
- SOELAS: hymns, 151.
- SOG-UTHĀNA: grief-lifting, 170. See Mourning.
- SOLEAKIS: Rajpūt converts, 70.
- SOLEIMĀN: Prophet, knowledge of the Great Name Ismī 'Azam first possessed by, dominion of, over men, genii, winds, birds, and beasts, uttering of the name of, casts out demons, cures the sick and raises the dead, 143. See Magic.
- SOMNĀTH: ruler of, 2 note 3.
- SOMIS: goldsmiths, converts from the Hindu caste of the same name; have a bad name for mixing gold or silver with cheaper metals, 70.
- SORcery: belief in, 56.
- SPIRIT: water. See Khwājah Khizr.
- SPIRITS: belief in, 30, 142, 147; religious men Sayads or Mullas called to cast out, 143; Amils or exorcists asked to cast out spirit of barrenness, 147; casting out of, at the shrine of Mirān Sayad Ali at Unjāh, 128-129; Akshobhāla—treatment resorted to by Meman women to cast out, 56; vows made to, 123. Evil, Gujarāt means of subduing, 145; cautions against the baneful influence of, during pregnancy, 148-149, during childhood, 166 and note 1.
- SUBDIVISIONS: of Gujarāt Muslimāns, two main sections of—Forcigaers and Hindu converts, 1; two main groups of Forcigaers—the four chief or regular classes of, Sayads, Shaikhs, Mughals, and Pothāns, 6; and the seventeen special communities of part foreign descent, 6, 11; Hindu converts, 3-5; nine classes of, connected with religion, 18, 20; five with trade, 18, 24; twenty-one with land, 18, 58; twenty-two with crafts, 18, 70; eleven with service, 18, 80; fourteen with labour, 18, 85.
- SUBOJI-NIMAZ: morning prayer, 49.
- SUFĪS: law divine Magic, 143. See Magic.
- SUNĀGANS: married women who have never lost their husbands, 163.
- SULAIMĀN: traveller (851), 2 note 1.
- SULĀIVĀN: Yaman priest, 27.
- SULĀIMĀN FĀRAS: saint, 85.
- SUNYAS: Hindu tribe of Rajpūt origin, converted by Maimūd Begada (1473); said to belong to the Mihira Gurjjarā stock; call themselves descendants of Arab tribes, 70.
- SUNDARJI: Lohāna convert, grandson of Mānekji, his Muhammadan name Adam, head of the converted Lohāna community, 51.
- SUNNAH-WAL-JAMĀ'AT: the Prophet, 3 note 3.
- SUNNI: one of the two forms of Muslimān faith, 123; origin and points of difference of, 46-47, 125-126; Imāms of, 125 note 2, 126; schools of, 126 note 1; schisms of, Mahdavi, 6 note 1, 35 note 1, and Walhābi, 12 and note 1, 13; spread of, in Gujarāt, by Sunni Muslimān rulers, 125.
- SURĀD: early Arab settlements at, 1 note 1.
- SURĀBĀTIS: Pirāna tomb of, 76 note 2. See Pirāna tombs.
- SURAH-I-AN-RUMĪN: holy book, 162.
- SURAH-I-YĀSIN: chapter of the Kurān read to a dying Khajāh, 46.
- SURAT: establishment of Zanjira Sidis at, 3; chief seat of the head Mulla of Dādī Bahorās, 25, 31 and note 4; college at, in train Mullas, 32; arrival of Memans at, 51; shrine of the Naw Shahīd or nine martyrs at, 129; Imām-bāda at, 132; Tādziahs in, 138 note 1.

SÚRCHAND: Rája, governor of Navsári, his daughter married to Núr Satápur, 38.
STARS: reading of, by Hnsaini Bráhmans, 22.
STIMULANTS: use of, 110. See Opium and Tobacco.
SWITZERS OF THE EAST: Balúchis, 17.

TAAWÍZ: nmulet, use of, 133.
TAAZÍAHs: miniature shrines of the martyrs of Karbala, 125; vows paid to, during Moharram, 128, 129-130; show of, in Gujarát during Muharram, 138-139; first making of (1400), 139 note 1. See Tábúts.
TABAKÁT-I-NÁSMI: work on history, 38, 65.
TABARHUK: morsel of sacred food, 140.
TABÚTS: see Tázíahs.
TAPAJJUD: midnight prayer, 126 note 3.
TÁIS: silk-weavers, take name from Táí, are of mixed origin, partly foreign Musalmáns partly Hindu converts, said to have been taught the craft by Prophet Idris, Baláir Táis claim Arab descent, 80.
TÁJMAHÁN SÁLÁR: mosque of, at Ahmedábád, 62.
TAKBÍR: call to prayer, 151, 155.
TAKI AND JALÁIN: ninth Shiáh Imám, 125 note 2.
TAKIYAH: Shiáh doctrine of concealment, literally fear or caution, 126 note 2.
TAKKADRUH: the Panjáb, called after the tribe of Takshaks, 70. See Takshaks.
TAKSHAKS: tribe in the Panjáb, represented by the Tanks, 70. See Takkadesh.
TALAN: special dish among Híjás, 21.
TALAN TEZL: See Tora.
TALISMANS: use of, to secure speedy delivery, 155.
TALÁGHUS: words with special magical powers, 143. See Magic.
TÁNKs: Hindu converts, landholders, said to represent the tribe of Takshaks, the family the Sultáns of Gujarát belonged to, 70.
TÁNÁQADH: hill citadel of Ajmir, 6 note 1 (7).
TARÁWÍH: night prayers during Ramazán, 123.
TÁRIKH-I-ALAI: historical work, 65.
TÁRIKH-I-MÁÁSCMI: (1000), historical work, 60 note 3.
TÁRIKH-I-TADARI: historical work, 14 note 3.
TÁSHOHIS: drum-players, guild of, 81.
TAWAKKUL: resignation, 7, 8.
TAXTS: paid to the religious head by Dáudd Bohorás, 32-33; by Khojáhs, 49 and note 2; by Memans, 67; 126 and note 4; 141 note 8.
TELIA: Shaikh beggars in Rádhanpur, 8 note 2. See Shaikhs.
TENA: holiday on the thirteenth day of Safar, 139. See Talan Tezl.
THAKKAR: title. See Thákur.
THÁKUR: title of the Lohánas, Hálár Khojáhs addressed by the title of, 89.
THOHIS: wandering tribe of Hindu converts, 90.
THIRFT: among Musalmán population, 121. See Condition.
THIRIZIS: chief Sayad family in Gujarát, 6 note 1.

TITLES: among Mughals, 9; Patháns, 11; Sayads, 7; Shaikhs, 8; 22; 39.
TOBACCO: use of, among Musalmán population, 110-111. See Stimulants.
TOD: Colonel, 1 note 1.
TONDS: see Shrines.
TONAS: songs, 164.
TRADE: classes of Musalmán population connected with (1872 census), 122. Classes of Hindu converts following. Bohorás, 24-35; Dudwáls, 35; Karáías, 36; Khojáhs, 36-49; Memans, 60-57.
TRADERS: See Trade.
TREE: disease-curing powers of the, near the grave of saint Mirán at Únjáh, 128; issuing property in the, near the tomb of saint Sháh Alam at Ahmedábád; near the grave of saint Mirán at Únjáh; jasmine and rose bushes at the shrines of certain saints, 118.
TRENNYO: term of scorn among Khojáhs, 41.
TRIKAM: Sindh Mukhi, devotee of Fir Sadrand din, 40.
TURKÁS: beliefless epicures, Khojáhs, 41.
TURKI HAJAMS: barbers, of mixed origin, two divisions of; Jokháis and Hajáms, antics of, character, punnis by religion, honour saint Sulaiman Farns, 84-85.
TWELTEKS: division of Shiáhs, 47. See Isna-shahis, Shiáhs.

UBAIDULLAH-INNI ZIAD: besieges the holy martyrs of Karbala, and slaughters them, 138.
UBATNA: cosmetic rub, 163, 164.
UDÁPUR: conquest of, by Arabs, 1 note 1.
UJJAIN: conquest of, by Arabs (724); appanage of Chitor, 1 note 1 continued on page 2, former seat of the head priest of the Dáudd Bohorás, 31 note 4.
UJJANTA: Júnágnadh hill, 1 note 1 continued on page 2. See Girnár.
ULAMAS: learned men of Ahmedábád, 63.
ULAVI: high magic, 143. See Magic.
UMAR: son of Khattáb, second Khalífah, his prejudice against India, 1 note 1; 125; suffers death as a martyr, 186.
UMAR-AL-FÁRUK: ancestor of the Fáruki Shaikhs, 8. See Fhaikhs.
ÚNJHA: village, 66 miles north of Ahmedábád, shrine of Mirán Sayad All at, 66, 128, 148.
URAZIS: chief Sayad family in Gujarát, 6 note 1 (7).
URAS: death-day fairs, 66; yearly meetings in honour of saluts, 133 note 2.
UTRAH: governor of Basrah, 1 note 1.
UTIMÁN: 125; the third Khalífah, 186.
UTIMÁN-ATH-TRAKAFI: governor of Bahrein, sends first expedition to India (636), 1 note 1.

VÁGHELA KINGS: 2 note 3. See Anahilaváda Kings.
VAKIL: deputy of Khojáh Imáms, 41.
VICAR OF GOD: 47. See Ali.
VISHNÚ: 40. See Avatára, Adam.
VONORVU: origin of the word Bohora, 24.
VOWS: offerings of, allowed by the law of the Prophet; forms of, 127-128; made, by Indian Musalmáns, to saints, to visit shrines of note, 128-129; to Tazíahs and other institutions of the Muharram, 129-130, to genii, fairies, and spirits, 128, 130.

WAAZ: sermon, 184 note 2, 169.

WAFAT: holiday, on the twelfth day of the third month, 140. See Rabi-ul-Awwal.

WAGHDAS: names possessing special magical powers, 143. See Magic.

WAHHABIS: Dissenters, known as Gheir Mukallid or Ahl-i Hadith, 12; schism from Sunni faith, 13; origin and rise of sect in Arabia, the chief leaders and the government of, duties of, 12 note 3; brought into India (1821), their rise to importance (1857), spread of their doctrines in Gujarát, chiefly by Maulawi Lútkat Ali, among Sunni Bohoras, 13, 61; 175; doctrines of 13, 61, 123.

WALI: saint, 62. Name of a child in Akika or naming sacrifice, 158.

WALID: Al, Umayyad Khalifá, 1 note 1.

WALIMAH: marriage dinner among Arabs, 16.

WALKER: Colonel, 68.

WÁNUDEV: deity of village Bohorás, 61.

WARA: town near Thatha, seat of the Momans, 51.

WATSON: Colonel J. W., 25 note 1.

WHITE HÚNS: see Húpas.

WORSHIP: Muslim form of, 126 and note 5; form of, among Khojáhs, 43. Saint, 12; Fire, 20.

WUZÚ: ablution, 126 note 5.

YÁ-JABBÁR: word having special powers, 143. See Magic.

YÁ-WADÚDO: word having special powers, 143. See Magic.

YÁKÚB: Sayad Budha, ancestor of the Urali Sayad family, 6 note 1 (7).

YAMAN: province of, in Arabia, 3; ancient seat of the head priest of the Bohorás in, 27, 33.

YASWAD: word having special magical powers, 143. See Magic.

YUDISHTHIRA: bhakta, 48. See Avatáras, Bhakta.

YÚSUF BIN SULAIMÁN: high priest of Shíth Bohorás, settles at bidhpur, 27 note 2.

ZAFAR KHÁN: conquers Gujarát (1371), learned men use arguments among his followers to persuade people to embrace Islám, 3 note 3; governor of Gujarát (1391); first king of Ahmedábád, 5.

ZAIN-UL-ÁBIDÍN: fourth Shiáh Imám, 125 note 2.

ZAKARIYAH: Prophet, 127.

ZAKARIYYA: Háji, Meman of Bombay, instance of his secret charity, builds a mosque in Bombay named after him, 52 note 4.

ZAKÁT: regular Musalmán alms, 33, 49; poor tax, 126 note 4.

ZAMORINS: of Malabár, proselytisation of one of the, by Náintas, 15 note 1.

ZAMZAM: the well of the Kaaba, holy water of, 171.

ZANJIRA: Sidi Stato, 12; Sidis of, at Surat, 3.

ZARIS: vows or offerings to, 128.

ZEIN-UD-DÍN: head Mulla of Dáúdi Bohorás, 31 note 4.

ZÍKRAT: feast on the third day after death, 169.

ZICHÁS: women dying in childbirth, 150.

ZILHAJJ: twelfth month of the Musalmán year, holidays in, 141.

ZUBEIR: ancestor of one of the families of Náintas, 14 note 3.

ZUHR: noon prayer, 126 note 3.

INDEX (PÁRSI SECTION).

- ABRASIO: Khalifa. See Khalifa.
- ADDUL REHMAN: Muhammadan fanatic, raises a revolt in Mándvi (1840), 188 note 5.
- ABUL FAZL: hietorian, 188 note 4; notices in his account of Surat the followers of Zerdusht; is given charge of the sacred fire by Akbar, 190.
- ACCOUNTS: of the Pársis, by European travellers and authors, Jordanus, (before 1323); Friar Oderic (1323), 189 note 1; Garcia d'Orta (1535), 189; Mr. Lord (1620); Sir Thomas Herbert (1626), 190; Mandelslo (1638), 190-191; Thevenot (1660); Ogilby (1670); Fryer (1674), 191; Orington (1690), 192; Niebuhr (1764), 195; Stavorinus (1774), 195-196; Forbes (1783), 197-198; by Musalman authors, Idrisi (1153), 187; Abul Fazl (1590), 190.
- ACHÆMENEAN: dynasty (B.C. 350), Panjáb under the, 183 note 4 continued on page 184.
- ACT: Divorce, Marriage, Succession, 238; 244; administration of justice under, 244. See Community.
- ADAR: ninth day of the Pársi month; ninth month of the Pársi year, 216, 217.
- ADAR JASAN: high festival day, observances on, 217. See Jasans.
- ADARNI: ceremony pertaining to marriage invitations, 233.
- ADERÁN: Atesh, fire of fires, 185 note 2; purification and installation of, 213-214. See Fires (Sacred).
- ÆTHRAPATI: Zend word for Herbad, 222 note 1.
- ÆFRINGAN: portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.
- AGARNI: ceremony relating to pregnancy; presents given in, rites relating to, 227-228. See Pregnancy.
- AGÍARI: Fire-place, 213; Fire-temple, 222; list of, 247-251. See Temples (Fire).
- AHMAD BÉG: Nayab of Brouch, 198.
- AHMED: Enlitan (1413-1443), his bringing of a keen Musalman spirit into his government, 188.
- AMIRÁN: Satan, 206 note 1; belief in, 212. See Beliefs (Leading).
- AHUNVAT: a Gáthá Day, 218.
- AHUNVAT GÁTHA: 210.
- AHURAMAZD: the Creator, 212, 217; All-knowing Lord, 211; belief in, 212; Zoroaster brings the true religion from, 213; name of, included in the Amshaspands, 215, 216. First day of the Pársi month, 217.
- AIRPAT: Pehlevi word for Herbad, 222 note 1.
- AJANTA: caves, believed to contain a painting relating to Nanshirván's embassy to Pulikest II. and pictures of Parviz and Shirin, 183 note 4 continued on page 184.
- AKBAR: Mughal Emperor, conversion of, to the Pársi faith (1578), 190 and note 4, 197 note 2.
- ALAP KHÁN: general of Alá-ud-din Khilji; defeats the Rajput king of Sanján; drives away the Pársis from Sanján (1315), 187; probably Ulugh Khán, brother to Alá-ud-din; may be Alap Khán, brother-in-law to Alá-ud-din, 187 note 3. See Ulugh Khán.
- ALÁ-UD-DIN KHILJI: 187 and note 3.
- ALEXANDER: the Great, 211 note 2 (9), (10), (11).
- ALL SOULS DAY: 216. See Farvardin Jasan.
- ALL SOULS FEAST: 216. See Farvardin Jasan.
- ALMS-GIVING: 245.
- AMARDAD: Amshaspánd. Seventh day of the Pársi month; fifth month of the Pársi year, 217.
- AMARDAD JASAN: high festival day, 217. See Jasans.
- AMERDAD SÁL: leading high day, 219. See Festivals (Season).
- AMIN: Principal tadar, high judicial appointment, 198 note 5.
- AMIR KHUSEV: (1300) 187 note 3; 188 note 2.
- AMSHASPÁND: Immortal Furtherers; Hafta; Seven days of the month and seven months of the year named after, 215, 216.
- AMULETS: faith of women in; objects of, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
- ANDHIÁBUS: priests, derivation of the word, 222.
- ANGELS: belief in, 213.
- ANGHOMANYUS: 212. See Ahriman.
- ANIMAL FEAST: 217. See Bahman Jasan.
- ANJUNAWS: local councils; of Navsári, constitution, functions, and powers of, 244; of Imperial Gujarát, constitution, position, and duties of, 245. See Community.
- ANKLESHWAR: Páreis found in (1258); copy of the Vispersád made at, 186 and note 7.
- ANQUEZIL DU PERRON: 183 notes 2, 4; 187 note 2; 189 note 2.
- APASTA: see Avesta.
- APPEABANON: 201.
- ARABS: victory of, over the Persians (638), (641), 183; settlement of, in the island of Jeran, 183 note 3; strong in Canton (758), 183 note 4 continued on page 185; treatment

- of the fire-worshippers in Persia by, 188 note 3.
- ARDĒSHIR: leader of the Sanjān Pārsis, his death in fighting against Musalmāns (1815), 187.
- ARDĒSHIR: son of Bahman, makes a copy of the Vandidād in Seistān (1184), is said to have come to Gujārat; is said to have given the copy of the Vandidād to the Pārsis, 189 note 2.
- ARDĒSHIR: second son of Dhonjisha of Surat, descendant of Nek Sathkhan, 197 note 2; as head of the Surat Police; his receiving in reward grants of villages from the British Government (1829), 198 note 5 continued on page 199.
- ARDĒSHIR NOSHERVĀN: Kirmān priest, is sent to Dehli to explain the Zoroastrian faith to Akbar (1578), 190 and note 8.
- ARDIBEHREHT: Amshaspand. Third day of Pārsi month; second month of the Pārsi year, 217; 218. Leading high day, observances on, 218. See Festivals (Season).
- ARDIBEHREHT JASAN: high festival day, observances on, 217. See Jasans.
- ASĀ: ancestor of Navsāri priests, 221.
- ASAD KHĀN: vazir of Aurangzib, 196 note 3.
- ASPADĀD: fifth day of the Pārsi month; twelfth month of the Pārsi year, 217, 218.
- ASPADĀD JASAN: high festival day, observances on; also known as Earth Feast, 217. See Jasans.
- ASPADĀRMAD: the earth-spirit or angel, 206.
- ASPENDĀRĪ KĀMDĪRĪ: Dastur, high priest of Broach, gives a.d. 716 as the year of the Pārsi settlement at Sanjān, 185 note 3.
- ASSOCIATION: Law, formation of, 241. See Community.
- ASTROLOGY: faith in, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
- ATESH ADERĀN: see Aderān.
- ATESH BEHRĀM: the fire of Behrām, 185 note 2, 213; purification and installation of, 214-216; temple of, at Sanjān, 185, at Bombay, 193 note 2; chief temples of, in Gujārat, 214; list of, 215 note 2, 247. See Fires (Sacred), Temples (Fire).
- ATESH DĀDOERĀN: hearth fire; is also called Proper-place Fire; in the Agiāri or Daromeher 213. See Fires (Sacred).
- ATESHPEREST: Pārsis so called (1660), 191.
- ATHORNAN: priest, a class of the old Persian community, 213; 222.
- ATHRAVAN: 223. See Athornan.
- AURANGZEB: Mughal Emperor, his interview with the head of the Surat factory and Rustam Mānek (1660), 196 note 3.
- AVĀN: tenth day of the Pārsi month; eighth month of the Pārsi year, 216.
- AVĀN ARDUISUR: water-spirit or angel, 206, 216.
- AVĀN ARDUISUR JASAN: high festival day, observances on, 216-217. See Jasans.
- AVESTA: language of the holy books, 204 and note 1; sacred texts, 211; Sassanian name of the ancient texts, 211 note 1. See Zend Avesta.
- BĀDĀML: town in Bijāpur District, capital of Pulikesi II., 183 note 4.
- BAGHA: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (3).
- BAOHAN YESHT: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (16).
- BAHMAN: animal guardian. Second day of the Pārsi month; eleventh month of the Pārsi year, 217.
- BARMAN JASAN: high festival day; observances on, 217. See Jasans.
- BAKTRIA: country of Zoroaster, 211.
- BALSAR: Pārsi houses in (1411), 186 note 6; Fanjan fire brought to (1741), 193.
- BAHMANJI BEHRĀMJI PATEL: Mr., 195 note 1.
- BANĀJIS: chief family among early Pārsi settlers in Bombay, 195.
- BANDAR ARĀS: port of, in the Persian Gulf; early Persian trade passes from Joran to, 183 note 3. See Gombrun.
- BĀNEDA: Pārsi settlement in, Sanjān fire brought to, 187.
- BARASHNUM: cleansing ceremony, 223 and note 1; 226; 230 note 2.
- BARASHNUM GAH: purifying place, 228; 226.
- BASRA: city of, founded by Khalif Umar, 181 note.
- BEAR: Great, 217 note 1. See Haptnairing.
- BEDANI: (1504) 188 note 4.
- BEHEDIN: layman, meaning of, 225 note 1.
- BEHERAMINI: vow, rites relating to, 230-231. See Vows.
- BEHREHT: place of reward, belief in, 212.
- BEHMAN KEROBĀD SANJĀNA: of Navsāri, author of the Kishah-i-Sanjān, 183 note 2.
- BEHRĀM: fire of, 185 and note 2, 213. See Atesh Behrām.
- BEHRĀM: ancestor of the Broach priests, 221.
- BEHRĀM GOR: Persian prince, visits India (436); marries a Hiadu princess; establishes the Gardabin dynasty, 183 note 4 continued on page 184.
- BELIEFS: Early, 220; Leading, 212-213.
- BESNA: sitting ceremony of a child, 231.
- BETROTHALS: conditions of, presents in, 232-233. See Customs.
- BIANDAR: central pit in a Tower of Silence, 240 note 1.
- BIĀRUT: hills, eight miles east of Sanjān, Pārsis fly to, 187.
- BIEB: 240; Bearers, 239. See Nascahlāra.
- BIRTH: rites and ceremonies relating to; news of, giving presents on, 228; naming of the child, 229; horoscope of the new-born, 229-230; Pashori ceremony, Dasori ceremony; the Mother Sixth worship, Vndhavo presents, 229; Joripori presents in the third month after; thanksgiving ceremony of Palli, of Ohokhin, 230. See Customs.
- BIRTH-DAY: observances on, 231.
- BONANJI: son of Rustam Mānek, 196 note 3.
- BOMBAY: under the Portuguese (1500-1660); under the British (since 1666); settlement of Pārsi families in, 195; as head-quarters of the Pārsis (1867), 198; development of the trade of, due to Pārsis, 195; Pārsi success in, 199; first Kadmi fire temple established in (1783), 198 note 2; Atesh Behráms in, 247; Agiáris in 248-249; Towers of Silence in, 252.

BONNEL. Mr., Chief of the English factory at Surat, 196 note 3.
BOOKS: sacred, 211-212; languages of, 204 and note 1, 211 and note 1. See Zend Avesta.
BOOTH-BUILDING: 233. See Mandav.
BRITISH: the, Bombay transferred to (1666); Surat transferred to (1759), 195.
BROACH: settlements of Pársis in (1300), 186; riot at (1837), 198 and note 3; Pársi martyr of, 198; scholarships in Zend and Pehlevi established at, 194.
BROKERS: Pársis as, of European trading companies at Surat, 196.
BRUCE: Annals of the East India Company, 196 note 3.
BURIAL-PLACES: names of, 254.
BURKE: helps Raghunathráo Peshwa's agent and his Pársi companion, 196 note 3.
BURNES: Sir A., 189 note 4.
BURUSH: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (9).
CHAMBAY: settlement of Pársis in, Pársi traders in, relations of the Pársis of, with the Pársis of the Panjáb, 186 and note 1; 188 note 4; copies of the Vandiddá made at, 189 note 2.
CANTON: in China, Arabs and Persians in; Mobeds in, 185 note.
CENSUS DETAILS: strength of the Pársis in (1806), (1816), (1817), (1823), (1835), (1852), population according to the census of, (1872); (1881); (1891), 183, 193 note 2.
CHAKÁRZAN: widow re-marriage, form of, 238 and note 2.
CHAMPANER: capital of Mahmud Begada, 187 note 3.
CHÁNDÁ: ancestor of the Navsári priests, 221.
CHANDRAULI: apparently Chandravati.
CHANDRAVATI: near Mount Abn, settlement of Pársis in, 189.
CHANGA ÁSA: Dáwar, religious layman, works miracles, renews and extends the Pársi faith, 187; builds a fire-temple at Navsári for the Sanján fire, 188; continues the practice of referring religious points to Persian priests, 189; is appointed Dessal of Navsári (1419), 200 note 1.
CHAYA SÁHÍAR: Sanján high priest, brings the Sanján fire to Navsári, 188.
CHEUL: about twenty miles south of Bombay, Pársi settlements in; fire worshippers and fire-temples mentioned at, 186.
CHHATRE: Goddess, worship of, is also called Sathi or Mother Sixth, 229.
CHIDRUSHT: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (12).
CHINA: early trade connection of Persia with; Persians going to; fire temples in, 183 note 4 continued on pages 184, 185; first modern Pársi visitor to, 195 note 2.
CHINVAT: way to heaven, 211 note 2 (5). See Dámdát.

CHOKHÍAR: thanksgiving ceremony, rites relating to, 230. See Birth.
CHRISTIANS: Kalyán, Persian Bishop among, 184; Manichæan, 188 note 4.
CLOSE. Colonel, Resident at Poona, 198 note 5.
COARIS: a class of merchants and shopkeepers in Bassein, 169. See Gauvs.
COCHIN: Surat Pársis go to; excise farm of, held by a Pársi, 196 and note 2.
COOK: the, is held sacred, 220; the crow of, believed to scare evil spirits, 220 note 1. See Beliefs (Early).
CODE OF MORALS: 213.
CORNS: Baktrian, 183 note 4.
COLONISTS: Pársis as, 200.
COMMUNITY: the old Persian, four classes of, 213; modern, formation of a Law Association in; passing of the Acts by Government to regulate the customs of; local councils, or Anjumanás of, 244; public funds of, 245; two sections of,—the Shenshábis and Kadmis, 193 note 2, 194.
COMPANY: the United East India, 192 note 3.
CONFESSION: of faith, 211; of sin, 223, 232.
CONVERSIONS: to the Pársi religion, of Thána Hindus, 189 note 1; of Emperor Akbar, 190; of the Pársis to Hindu and Musalmán faith, 187 note 4.
COWDUNG: spirit and evil eye scaring property in, 223 note 2.
CUSTOMS: rites and ceremonies relating to Pregnancy, 45; Birth, 46-48; Góths or Vows, 48-49; Nauzoí, 49-50; Betrothals, 50-51; Marriage, 51-57; Death, 57-61.
DADISETHS: chief family among earlier settlers in Bombay, 195.
DAILY LIFE: of men, 208-209; of women, 209; of boys, 209-210; of girls, 210.
DÁMDÁT: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (5).
DARÁMEHER: gate of Mercy; fire temple set apart for the rites of the dead, 213; 224; 225; 226.
DARÍUS HYSTASPES: conquers the Panjab, (p. 510), 183 note 4.
DÁRUS: priests, 222.
DARORI: ceremony relating to birth, 229. See Birth.
DASTUR: high priest, office of; duties and position of, 222; as a member of an Anjuman, 244.
DÁVÁK: see Changa Ása.
DAYS: of the Pársi month, names of, 215, 216 note 1. (High) Festival, 216-217; see Jasans. Leading High, 218-219; see Festivals (Season).
DEATH: rites and ceremonies relating to; dead body in the house, 239, recital of prayers near the dead, 239-240; bier, 240; bier-bearers or nasesálaras, 239 and note 2; last look at the dead; carrying of the dead body to the Tower of Silence, 240; funeral party, widow of the dead, 241; uthamna or rising from mourning, 242; feast-giving on, 207, 243. See Customs.

- DEH: tenth month of the Pársi year, 217, 218.
DEH JASAN: high festival day, 217. See Jasans.
DEHRA: perhaps Dehra Dún, 188 note 4.
DELIVERY: place of; services of midwife at the time of, 228. See Birth.
DESAI: family of, of Navsári, 244; office of, holders of the office of Porjá, 200 note 1.
DHANJISHA: of Surat, takes active part in the suppression of Mándvi riot, recognition of his services by the British Government, 198 note 5.
DHANPÁL: ancestor of the Udváda, Bulsar, and Sanjan Priests, 221.
DHAVAL: priest, son of Shápur Sheharar, 221.
DIRECTOR: Dastúr, 222.
DISPUTES: religious, between the two bodies of priests of Navsári, 192; as to the reckoning of the year, 193 and note 2, 194.
DIU: island of, on the south coast of Kathiáwár; Pársis' first settlement in (700), 184.
DOCKYARD: Surat, Pársi carpenters as managers of; Bombay, 192 note 3.
DOGHMA: 240 note 1. See Tower of Silence.
DORÁNJI NÁNÁBHAI: founder of the Patel family, 195.
DOWÁSRUJD: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (18).
DOWSON: Professor, 188 note 4.
DRESS: of village men, ordinary, on great occasions; of townsmen, indoors and out of doors; of Priests; details and cost of, 201-202; of village women, ordinary, on great occasions; of townswomen; details and cost of; of children; details and cost of, 203.
DRINKS: articles of. See Food.
DUDDLEY: Mr., 192 note 3.
DUSHMATA, DUZUKHTA, DUZUYARSTA: a section of the code of morals, 213.
DUZUK: place of punishment after death, belief in, 212.
DWÁRKA: in Kathiáwár, fire-worshipping priests in, 188 note 4.
- EARTH FEAST: 217. See Aspandád Jasan.
EDUCATION: of boys, primary, 209; higher, 203; of female, primary and higher, 204; schools and colleges for, 203; in Persian, Zend, and other languages, 194, 204; scholarship for Zend and Pehlvi, 194; religious, of boys and girls of laymen, of the sons of priests; 209, 210; Madresa and council schools for, 204.
ELPHINSTONE: Mr., British Resident at Poona (1814), 198 note 5.
ENGLAND: Pársi visitors to, 196 note 3.
ENGLISH: the, drive the Portuguese from the island of Jeran, 183 note 2; as Mughal admirals, obtain command of Surat castle, 197 note 2. Language, instruction in, 203.
ERVAD: title of under-priest, 225. See Horbad.
ESPASIS: that is Pársis, 189.
EVESARUTHEMGEN: fourth watch, 214 note 1. See Geh.
- EXORCISTS: employment of, to drive out evil spirits and to cure the effects of the evil eye, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
EYE: evil, belief in, cautions against, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
- FACTORY: Surat, 196 note 3. Steam industry, leading part of the Pársis in, 199 and note 3.
FAMINE: in Gujardt (1790), 199 note 1.
FAREDUN: victory of, over the sorcerer Zohak, 216, 220 note 1.
FARS: 183 note 1; 188 note 3. See Párs.
FARVARDIN: nineteenth day of the Pársi month, 216; first month of the Pársi year, 216; commemoration at Surat of the 25th day of, 186 note 9.
FARVARDIN JASAN: high festival day, in the month of Farvardin; in the month of Adar; other names of; observances on, 216. See Jasans.
FARVARDIN YASHT: 194 note 1.
FEASTS: large dinners; occasional of; food served at; ways of serving at; cost of, 207 and note 2. Fire, 217. See Adar Jasan.
FENEREST: priestly genealogies, 225 and note 2.
FESTIVAL: (High) Days, 216-217. See Jasans.
FESTIVALS: Season, 217-219. See Gahambárs, Gáthas, Muktad holidays, Leading High Days.
FIRDUZI: 183 note 4.
FIRES: chief object of veneration; the sacred, three orders of, 213-215. See Atesh Dadghán, Aderán, Atesh Behram.
FOOD: spirit-searing virtue of; virtue of driving off visions in, 206 and note 1; varieties of; details of the cost of, 206-207 and note 1.
FORBES: his description of the Surat Pársis, 197-198.
FAVALHANT: star, 217 note 1.
FRANJÍ: son of Rustam Mánek, 196 note 3.
FRÁNJI KÁYESHÍ BANAJÍ: makes first attempt to open steam factory, 199 note 3.
FRAYASHIS: 216. See Frobars.
FROBARS: believed to be souls of the dead; guardian spirits; Farvardin Jasan performed in honour of, 216. See Fravalshis.
FRYER: (1674), his account of the Pársis, 191-192 and note 1.
FUNDS: charitable public; sources of; management of; chief uses of, 245. See Community.
FURNITURE: house, 205. See House.
- GANRES: people of Fars, found on the Gujardt coast (1300), 187 note 3; 188 note 3; of Rohilkhand, believed by Professor Dowson to be relics of the old Upper India Pársis; parts of Hind and Sindh belonged to (middle of tenth century), 188 note 4.
GABRI: dialect of the Kabul country, 188 note 4.
GAHAMBÁRS: religious national festivals, 207; season feasts, names of, observances during the, 217-218; 245. See Festivals (Season).
GARCIA D'ORTA: Portuguese writer, his notice of the Pársis, 189.

GARDABHIN: Kings, dynasty of, said to have been founded by the Persian prince Behram Gor, 183 note 4.

GĀTHĀS: last extra five days of the Pārsi year, names of, 218. See Festivals (Season).

GĀVUS: a class of merchants and shopkeepers found at Bāccin, 189. See Coarīs.

GAYEN: Mr John, 196 note 3.

GEN: a watch, names of, 214 and note 1; 215 and note 1; 225.

GEN: portion of the original Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.

GEIGER: Dr., 217 note 1.

GENEALOGICAL TREE: of the Gujarāt priests, 221; of Navāri Herbāds, 225 note 2.

GRSTOON: 190; 191.

GREKCHABI: estate of, near Navāri, received in grant by Mehrji Kaus from Akbar, 190.

GUOSTS: belief in, 220. See Beliefs (Early).

GODDUS: small-pox, offering of vows to, 220. See Beliefs (Early).

GOMBUK: 183 note 3; 190. See Bandar Abāy.

GOTUS: 230. See Vows.

GAHFRS: Persian Pārsis, 192 note 1.

GAHFRS: people of Pārs, 188 note 3; Pārsis so called (1640), 191. See Gahfrs.

GUJARATI: modern mother-tongue of the Pārsis, 203; 207.

GUZJARAS: fire-worshipping, 183 note 4. See Mithras.

GUZTAR: king, 183 note 4; Zoroaster proclaims his religion in the court of, 219; his conversion to the Zoroastrian faith, 211 note 2 (11).

HADOXNY: portion of the original Zend Avesta, 212 note 1; 220.

HATTA-ARSHĀSPAND: see Amshāspand.

HAMASON: a form of salutation, 219.

HAMARETHYRDM: sixth Gahanbār, 218. See Gahanbārs.

HAMILTON: New Account by, 192 note 4.

HASHANSTRĀY: agent of Razhūnāthras Peshwa, visits England, 196 note 3.

HASTMAN: Hindu monkey god, belief in, 220. See Beliefs (Early).

HATTARINO: leading constellation of the North, 217 note 1. See Heav (Great).

HĀY: chapters of the Yasna, 222.

HĀYAGEN: first watch, 214 note 1. See Geh.

HENRES: 193 note 4.

HERRAN: Under Priest, lower sacerdotal order of the priests, other names of, 222 and note 1; qualifications of, 222; ordination of, 223-225; titles of, 225. See Priests.

HENRIET: Sir Thomas (1626), writes on history and religion of the Pārsis, 190.

HISTORY: early historical references to the Persian connection with India in mythic times, 183 note 4; defeat of the Persians by the Arabs (638, 641), settlement of the Persians in the city of Ormuz after their defeat, 184; the Persians or the Pārsis leave Persia and seek safety in India, arrive and settle at Diu (about 700), 184; seek an asylum in Gujarat, arrive and settle at Sanjān (716), 185; spread as settlers and merchants in other parts of Gujarāt from Sanjān, 186; fall of Sanjān and flight of the Pārsis (1315); fly to Bānada with the sacred fire from the Bharut hills, 187; religious zeal of Changa Nsa, 187-188; increase in number and power of the Pārsis in south Gujarāt, 188; account of the Pārsis (1600-600) 189-190, (1600-1700), 190-192, (1700-1800) 193-197; conversion of Emperor Akbar to the Pārsi faith (1573), 190; settlements of the Pārsis (1600-1800), 195-197; in Bombay (before and after, 1666); spread along the Malabār coast; found in Madras (1780), 195; leading men among the Surat Pārsis, 196 and notes 1, 2, 3; honour and influence enjoyed by the Surat Pārsis at the court of Delhi, 197 and note 2; Pārsi hospitality, (1783); a Pārsi martyr; Pārsi prosperity (1800), 198; Pārsi success in Bombay (1790-189-), at other places, in various occupations, 199-200; religious disputes; division of the community into two factions of Shenshāhī and Kadmis, 193 and note 2; 194.

HOT: burning pile, offerings to, 220. See Beliefs (Early).

HOLIDAYS: see Jasns, Gahanbārs, Gāthās, Days (Leading High).

HOT: Persian plant, is believed to be the Vedic soma, 228 note 1; 231; a branch of the, presented to Surat Pārsis by Jamasp, 194 note 1.

HOU WATER: preparation of, early beliefs regarding, 228 and note 1. See Birth.

HOUVAST: 223 note 1.

HOUVARDIAH: priest, grandson of Shapur Shcheriar, 221.

HONORCODE: preparation of, 229; consultation of, 220; 229-230; 232.

HOSROUS: fifth watch, 214 note 1. See Geh.

HOSPITALITY: (1783), 198.

HOUSE: Town; Village; furniture in, 205; observances on the occasions of building, 225-226.

HORSEHOLD FIRE: see Ateah Dādghan.

HUSATA, HUKUTA, HUVASTA: a section of the code of morals, 213. See Beliefs (Leading).

HUNS: see White Huns.

HUSKARUN: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (10).

HUSKARUN: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (17).

HUTUX: craftsmen, a class of the old Persian community, 213.

JIN HAKKAL: (950), 183 note 3; 187 note 1; 188 note 3.

INVAHIST: Ghaznivide, attacks a colony of Persian fire-worshippers at Dehra, 188 note 4.

INDIST: (1163), historian, 189.

INDIA: early connection of, with Persia, 183 note 4. See Persia.

IRAN: see Persia.

ISPANDIYÂB: Prince, son of Gushtasp, persuades the Emperor of India to adopt fire worship. 183 note 4.

ISTAKUTHE: Al, 188 note 4.

IZSHENE: see Yashna.

JADI RÂNA: Yâdav chief of Sanjân, allows Pârsis to settle at Sanjân, 186.

JAHÂNGIR: Mughal Emperor, makes a grant of Ratnâgiri near Navsâri to Mulla Jamasp, 197 note 2.

JALÂL-UD-DIN: Malikshâh, king of Persia, orders the preparation of a calendar, 193 note 2.

JAMASP: Mulla, priest of Navsâri, visits Delhi (1619), receives a grant of Ratnâgiri near Navsâri from the Emperor Jahângir, 197 note 2.

JAMASP: Persian priest; visits Gujarât (1720); makes efforts to increase the knowledge of the Pârsis in their sacred books; leaves a copy of a Zend-Pehlevi Vandidâd; establishes centres of Zend-Pehlevi scholarships; makes a present of the true Hom plant and Farvardin Yasht to Surat Pârsis, 193 note 2, 194 and note 1.

JAMSHED: third king of the Peshdâdian dynasty, new year's day fixed by. 219.

JAMSHED: Behedin, Persian layman, arrives in Gujarât (1736), brings to the notice of the Surat Pârsis the wrong reckoning of the year, 193 note 2.

JAMSHED KEKOBÂD: priest, writes in Persian verse an account of the Surat Pârsis (1711), 196 note 3.

JAMSHEDI NAOROX: Leading high day; Jamshed's New Day; 219. See Festivals (Season).

JARASHT: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (14).

JASANS: monthly feasts, names of, observances during 216-217. See (High) Festival (Days).

JASQUES: in the Persian Gulf, 192 note 4.

JERAN: island of, settlements of the Arabs in (1303); a great trading centre; taken by the Portuguese (1503), by the Persians and English (1622), 183 note 3. See Oman, New.

JORDANUS: missionary, (before 1323) finds Pârsis in Thâna, 189 note 1.

JORPARI: presentation, literal meaning of, 230. See Birth.

KABISA: intercalary month in every 120th year; last performance of the, 193 note 2.

KADESIA: victory of the Arabs over the Persians at (638), 188.

KADNIS: a division of the Pârsi community, origin of, 193 note 2, 194. See Disputes (Religious).

KAIKHOSHRU: Herbad, stranger from Persia, makes copies of the Vandidâd from the Cambay copy, 189 note 2.

KAIOJI: son of Mirzan Khosru Beg, watch-repairer to Bajirao Peshwa; goes to Bhavnagar, makes a clock for the Chief, his descendants enjoy high reputation in Kâthiâwâr, 197 note 2.

KABADHAI FORAJI: son-in-law of Nek Sat Khân, visits Delhi, receives in grant an estate in Rander, 197 note 2.

KÂMÂJI HOMAJI: a Broach martyr, 198.

KÂNDIN PADAM: Dastur of Broach, 190 note 2.

KANHERI: Caves, in Silâets near Bombay, trace of the Pârsis in India (10th century) in Pehlevi writings in, 186 and note 2.

KÂUS: Mulla, a Broach priest, goes to Persia with his son Peshotan, the first Kadmi Dastur, 193 note 2.

KÂVASJI EDULJI: excise farmer in Cochin, 196 note 2.

KÂVASJI NÂNABHAI DÂVAR: opens the first steam factory, 199 note 3.

KÂVASJI RUSTOMJI: watch-maker, visits Delhi, receives the title of Mirzan Khosru Beg and a grant of land, 197 note 2.

KÊKOBÂD: son of Meherji, visits Delhi, receives a grant of land, 197 note 2.

KHÂETVODATHA: chapters of the Zend Avesta on marriages between near relatives, 211 note 2 (18).

KHALIFS: Abbasid, family of the; religious strictness of, 183 note 4, 185.

KHANÂTINI: vow, rites relating to, 231. See Vows.

KHÂNDÂN: Shet, wealthy family of Bombay, 196 note 3. See Nawroji.

KHARÂS: vow, rites relating to, 231. See Vows.

KHARÂSSI: vow, rites relating to, 231. See Vows.

KHARSI DJI JAMSEDJI MODI: of Cambay, enjoys a high position in the Peshwa's court, under the British Government (1809) receives presents of land in Cambay, 198 note 6.

KHARSEDJI RUSTOMJI KÂMÂ: Mr., gives the year of the arrival of the Pârsis at Sanjân, 185 note 3.

KHORDÂD: Amshaspad; sixth day of the Pârsi month; third month of the Pârsi year, 217.

KHORDÂD JASAN: high festival day, observances on, 217. See JASANS.

KHORDÂD SÂZ: leading high day; is believed to be the anniversary of the birth of Zoroaster; observances on, 219. See Festivals (Season).

KHONSHED KÂNDIN: Sanjân high priest, brings the Sanjân fire to Navsâri, 188.

KHUDASH-NÂE-ZÂT: an early form of marriage, 238 note 2.

KIRMAN: in Persia, merchants of, 183 note 3. Priests called from, to explain the Pârsi religion to the Emperor Akbar, 190.

KISSAN-I-SANJÂN: poetic account of the Pârsis, 183 and note 2; 187 and notes 2, 3.

KOHISTÂN: hills of, last Kabisa performed at, 193 note 2.

KONKANASTHS: Brâhmanas, said to belong to the Persian stock, 183 note 4.

KOSHUSARU: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (10).

KOSMAS INDIKOPLEUSTES: 183 note 4.

KUSTI: sacred cord, 201; 208; 227; investing the child with, 231 and note 2. Prayer, 208 note 1; 211.

LANGUAGES: 194, 204 and note 1, 211 and note 1.

LAVJI NASARYANJI VADIA: foreman in the Surat Dockyard; Bombay Dockyard built under the supervision of; first Parsi master-builder, 192 note 8.

LIBERALITY: of the Bombay Parsis, 199.

LORD: Mr., an English Chaplain, writes an account of the Parsis (1820), 190.

LYRA: constellation of, 217 note 1.

MADRAS: Parsis as merchants in (1780), Tower of silence in (1790), 195.

MADRESAS: 204. See Education.

MAG: Káranese word for son, signification of the term, 183 note 4 continued on page 184.

MAGHS: people delighting in fire worship, 187 note 3; of Tughlikpur, 188 note 4.

MAGI: Bráhmāni, mention of, by Ptolemy, (150); religion of, 183 note 4 continued on page 184.

MAGIANS: as captives of Timur (1398), 188 note 4.

MAGIO: faith in, 220. See Beliefs (Early).

MAGYAS: of Málwa, believed by Professor Dowson to be relics of the old Upper India Parsis, 188 note 4.

MAHMUD BEGADA: Sultán, supposed by Dr. Wilson to be the conqueror of Sanján, 187 note 3.

MAHESPAND JASAN: leading high day, Zoroaster proclaims his religion on, 219. See Festivals (season).

MAHYÁN: Herbad, brings copy of the Vandidad from Yazd in Persia to Uch in India, 186 note 1; 189 notes 2 and 3.

MALABAR: the coast of, spread of the Parsis along, 195.

MALCOLL: Sir John, Governor of Bombay, 198 note 5.

MALKESHANI: the corrected year; the Persian revenue year, 198 note 2.

MANOHERJI KHARSEDJI: Seth, Dutch broker, 196 note 1; visits Delhi, 197 note 2.

MANOHERPURA: a Surat city ward, named after Mr. Mancherji, 196 note 1.

MANDAY: see Booth-building.

MANDELSO: description of Surat Parsis by (1685), 190-191.

MÁNDVI: Abdul Rehman's revolt in (1810), 198 note 5.

MANIAN: Surat Parsi, visits England, 196 note, 3.

MANATAB: Full Priests. See Mohbed.

MARBS: chock, beliefs in, 209 and note 1; 229; 231. See Daily Life.

MARRIAGE: Fore, observances, turmeric-pounding ceremony, Mándav ceremony, Adarni or inviting ceremony 233; minor observances of, 233-234; observances during four days of, form of invitation to; song singing, 234 and note 1; preparations of; the Sopara procession; dress of Var-Rája or marriage chief; procession of the Var-Rája, 235; wedding ceremony; 236-237; giving and accepting presents before, 233, 235; after, 237; occasions of making presents in, the girls' portion of the presents in, 237 note 1; after-observances, feast-giving on the first Behram after, cost of, 23b and note 1; modern and earlier forms of, 238 and note 2, 239 and note 1. Act, 238, 244. Remarriage of a widow allowed and practised, 238. See Customs.

MARTYR: a Broach, 198.

MASUDI: (900-950), 183 note 4; 185; 186.

MAZDAYASNIAN: religion of the Parsis, known as, meaning of, 211. See Religion.

MAZDIASHNI DIN: The Parsi's expression for his religion, 213. See Religion.

MAZDIASHNI ZARTHOSHI DIN: see Mazdiashni-din.

MEALS: number and time of, kind of food served at, ways of serving at, 206. See Food. Prayer, 220 note 1.

MEDIAREM: fifth Gahambár, 218. See Gahambáras.

MEDIOSHEN: second Gahambár, 218. See Gahambáras.

MEDIOZAREM: the first Gahambár, 218. See Gahambáras.

MEHER: the sun or sun angel, sixteenth day of the Parsi month, seventh month of the Parsi year, 216, 218.

MEHER JASAN: high festival day, popular in Persia, observances on, 216. See Jasans.

MEHERANGAN JASAN: see Meher Jasan.

MEHERJI RANA: high priest of Navsári, converts emperor Akbar, receives grants from Akbar, 190, 197 note 2.

MINIRAS: see Gurjjaras.

MIRZAN: family of, 197 note 2. See Kavasji Rustamji.

MIRZAN KHOSRU BEG: title, 197 note 2. Kavasji the first recipient of.

MYTHEA: 216. See Meher.

MOBEDS: Full Priests, higher sacerdotal order of priests; also called Marátah, 222; qualifications of; ordination of; religious rules to be observed by; Persian precepts for; disqualification of, 226. See Priests.

MOB'H: topmost beam of a house, observances at the laying of, 206. See House.

MONIES: family among earlier settlers in Bombay, 195.

MOGHAL: Court, influence of the Parsis on; Parsi visitors to, 197 and note 2; Emperors, 190, 197 note 2.

MONOPOLY: in trade, 200.

MONTHS: of the Parsi year, 215; names of, 216 and note 2. See Veneration (Objects of).

MOON: veneration for, 218.

MOTHER SIXTH: goddess. See Chhathi.

MOYAD: ancestor of Surat priests. Of Navsári priests, 221.

MUHAMMAD SHAH: 187. See Ala-nd-din Khilji.

MUHAMMAD SHAH: Tughlik, possibly the conqueror of Sanján; reconquers Gnjarat and Thana (1848), 187 note 3.

MUHAMMAD SHAH: Mngal Emperor (1718-1748), 197 note 2.

MUHAPAS: or Mohbeds, found in Canton (845), 183 note 4 on page 185.

- MUKTAD: ceremony in honour of the dead, time of holding, observances in, observed as holidays, 218. See Festivals (Season).
- MULLA FERDZ: see Peshotan.
- MULLA JAMASP: Navsári priest, visits Dolhi, 197 note 2.
- MULLA KÁUR: see Káns.
- MUZAFFAR KHAN: a zealous Musalmán ruler, 188.
- NABUD: nonentity, 225. See Návar.
- NADUR: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (6).
- NAGAN HAM: Sanján high priest, brings the Sanján fire to Navsári, 186.
- NAGMANDAL: Snakeland, 186 note 6. See Navsári.
- NAHAN: bathing ceremony, 232.
- NAHAYAND: victory of the Arabs over the Persians at (611), 183.
- NAHS: in the Tower of Silence, 240 note 1.
- NAMES: selection of, 229; Persian; Hindu; Full, 229 note 1.
- NANABHAI NARANGJI PATEL: a Surat landlord, 196 note 4.
- NANPURA: a Surat city ward, named after a Páral, 196 note 4.
- NAORZ: New Year's Day; commonly called Páiti, observances on, 218, 219. See Festivals (Season), Páiti.
- NASRÁLARS: beer-bearers; dress of; duties of; sources of income of, 239 and note 2. See Death.
- NAVSHIRYÁN: the Just (531-579), his treaties and interchange of presents with the rulers of India and Sindh; his embassy to Pulikesi II., 183 note 4. See Ajanta.
- NAYAB: new comrade; under-priest; the purifying ceremony of; also called Novice, ordination of, 228-225. See Herbad.
- NAVÁRI: village of, meaning of the name of, settlement of Pársis in, 186 note 6; fire-temple built by Ohanga Ása in; Sanján fire brought to, 188; religious disputes among the priests of, 192; Táti Madresa in, 201; Zend and Pehlvi scholarship established in, 194.
- NAVZOT: initiation of a child into the mysteries of the Zoroastrian faith; ceremony and rites relating to, 231-232. See Customs.
- NAYABUN: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (16).
- NEX SÁZ KHÁN: a title, meaning of, Sorabji the first recipient of, 197 note 2.
- NERANG: cow's urine, purifying uses of, 203; 223; 224. Prayer, 208 note 2; 241.
- NERANGDIN: bull's urine, purifying uses of, 228 and note 2; 232.
- NERIOSHANG: priest, grandson of Shápur Sheheriar, translates the Zend Avesta into Sanskrit, 221.
- NERIOSENGH: (720), 211 note 1.
- NEWSÁRI: town in Persia; Navsári called after, 186 note 6. See Navsári.
- NIAXISH: portion of the original Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.
- NIEBUHR: (1764), his account of the Pársis, 195.
- NOVIOZ: Návar or under-priest, 223. See Návar.
- NOVROJI: son of Rustam Mánek, goes to England (1723), receives honour from the Court of Directors; buys Nowroji Hill, his family is known as Shet Khándán, 196 note 3.
- NOWROJI HILL: at Mazagaon in Bombay, property of Shet Khándán family, 196 note 3.
- NUSKS: original parts of the Zend Avesta; names and contents of, 211 and note 2. See Zend Avesta.
- OBSERVANCES: religious, 219-220.
- OCEAN: Indian, Persians as traders in, 184.
- ODERIO: Friar (1323), his account of the Pársis, 189 note 1.
- Ogilby: (1670), his account of the Pársis, 188 and note 4; 191.
- OVIRAVANGH: third watch, 214 note 1. See Geh.
- OMAN: the king of; country under the, considered a part of India, 184.
- ORDERS: Sacerdotal, Higher and Lower. See Priests.
- ORDINATION: of Herbad; of Mobed. See Priests.
- ORMUZ: city of, 183 note 3. New, see Jeran.
- ORNAMENTS: details and cost of, of men, 201-202; of women, 202-203; of children, 203. See Dress.
- OSTA: son of a priest before ordination so called, 225 note 1.
- OUSELEY: 185, note 4.
- OVANNA: evil-removing salutation, form of, 227. See Pregnancy.
- OVERTON: (1690) his account of the Pársis, 192.
- PACHAM: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (7).
- PACHORI: ceremony, rites relating to, 229. See Birth.
- PADSHAZAN: an early form of marriage, 238 note 2.
- PALLI: thanks-giving ceremony; offerings to the water-spirit in, 230; 231. See Birth.
- PANOHÁYETS: or local councils, 244. See Anjuman.
- PANCHMÁSHIN: ceremony relating to pregnancy, rites in, 227. See Pregnancy.
- PANGHATAN: five jewels, placed under foundation stone, 205. See House.
- PANDES: family of, among the early Pársi settlers in Bombay, 195.
- PANJAB: a part of the Persian dominions; conquest of, by Darius Hystaspes (B.C. 510); under the Achæmenæan dynasty, under the Indo-Skythian ruler, 183 note 4; relations of the Pársis of the, with Cambay Pársis, 186 note 1, 188 note 4.
- PÁRS: south-west provinces of Iran, Pársis the people of, 183 note 1.

PÁRSI: citizen of Párs, 183 note 1. See Párs.
PÁRSI-PÁKÁSH: 186 notes 6, 8; 189 note 3; 190 note 2; 193 note 1; 195 notes 2, 3; 196 notes 2, 3; 198 notes 2, 3.
PÁRVIZ: Khasru, grandson of Naushirván the Just, his treaties and interchange of presents with the rulers of India and Hindu; his portrait in Ajanta caves, his son the alleged founder of the Pál pur family, 183 note 1.
PATEL: family of, among early Pársi settlers in Bombay, 195. See Dorabji Nanabhai.
PATER: Páshmini, confession of sin, 223; 232.
PÁTITI: Day of Penitence; observance on. 216. See Nasoor.
PAPASH: old Persian word for Harbad, 222 note 1.
PARSI: language, original texts explained in, 211 note 1; commentaries written in, 212; scholarship for, 191.
PELVIS: Kingdom of, also called Irán, 183 note 1; its early religious (B.C. 1000), political (B.C. 1722), and commercial (A.D. 645) connection with India; its commercial reconnection with China (sixth century), 183 note 4; passed into the hands of the Arabs (611), 183.
PERFAN: Gulf, its early trade connection with Tháma, 183 note 1 on page 181.
PERSIAN: classical language, 201.
PIANDAN: son of Mulla Kárus goes to Persia (1768); becomes Káshmi high priest (1802); is well known as Mulla Feroz, 193 note 2.
PIRENEH: third Galambár, 218. See Galambára.
PIROZKAR: son of Dhanjisha of Surat, enjoys high posts of honour (1825); receives in grant villages from the British Government, 193 note 5.
PISCIS AUSTRALIS: constellation of, 217 note 1.
PLACE: FRUIT: see Spirit.
POLYDASH: formerly practised, now forbidden, 234.
POPULATION: see Census Details.
PORTUGUESE: the, take the island of Jeran (1505); are driven from the island by the Persians and the English (1622), 183 note 5; Bombay under (1500-1662), 195.
PRAYAG: Asoti, 208 note 1; Marriage, 236 note 1; Meal, 220 note 1; Nerang, 208 note 2.
PROMISANCY: rites and ceremonies relating to, Páshmish ceremony in; Agarni ceremony in; Osmala salutation in, 227. See Customs.
PROCEDES: making and receiving of, in betrothal, 232-233; on birth, 228; on marriage, before and after, 233, 235, 237 and note 1; on pregnancy, 227.
PURITAS: fire-worshipping, introduction of, from Persia into Dárla, 183 note 1; trace their descent to Shápur Sháhriar; genealogical tree of, 221; distribution of, into districts or charges; high priest or Dastur over a district or charge; secular business followed by; intermarriages among, 222; dress of, 201, 222; appearance of; religious functions of, 223; knuti weaving by the women of, 209, 222; other names of; higher and lower sacerdotal orders of, Harbad and Mobeds; ordination of, 222-226; schools kept by, 200; education of the sons of, 210; religious disputes among the two bodies of, in Navsári, 192. See Harbad, Mobeds.

PRIESTHOOD: 221-226. See Priests.

PRINCIPAL SADAN AMIN: see Amin.

PROBY: officer in the Surat Factory, 196 note 3.

PROPER PLACE FIRE: see Atesh Dádghán.

PRO-PERITY: (since 1800), Pársi, 198-200

PROLEMY: (150), 183 note 1; 186 note 6.

P'ULIKZSI II.: King of Hladani, receives embassy from Naushirván the Just, 183 note 4. See Ajanta.

QUPEN: name of a ship, built by Pársi carpenters, 192 note 3.

RAE: in Media, Zoroaster-born at, 211.

RAVAN: priest, son of Shápur, 221.

RAVA: ancestor of Navsári priests, 221.

RAVANSAR: ruler of the Panjáh, seems to have adopted the religion of the Magi, 183 note 4.

RAPINAVAN: midday ceremony performed on the Antilebedst day, 219.

RATHTHAYAGHEN: second watch, 214 note 1. See Geh.

RATANPÜR: Rajput chief of; sends troops against the Pársi settlers of Varáv, heroic defence of the Pársi female-warriors, 186 note 9. See Varáv.

RATHISTAN: warrior, a class of the old Persian community of, 31.

RATTOINI: estate near Navsári, Mulla Jamasp receives the grant of, 197 note 2.

RATTS: head of cecion, 211 note 2 (8).

RATSHIRAI: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (8).

RAVAYATIS: collection of opinions of the Persian priests on doubtful religious questions, 189; compilation of, 189 note 3; writings in Persian of authoritative customs, 212 and note 3; Persian precepts, 226; mention of Pársi settlements in Navsári and other places in, 189; reference to the year of moving the Sanján fire to Navsári in, 88 note 1; 100 note 3; 234.

RE VINDONA: Hirji Jivangi, visits China, (1756), 195 note 2.

REMANUS: different names of, 211, 213; meaning of, 211; explanation of, 185; the sacred books of, 211, 22; leading beliefs in, 212-213; Fire-Temples, 213-215; Sacred Fire—Atesh Dádghán, 213, Aderán, 213-214; Atesh Behram, 244-25; objects of veneration—Amshaspandás and Yazids, 216-218; High Festival days—Jasani, 216-217; Season Festivals—Gáshambars, 217-218, Gáthás, Mukted holidays, 218; leading high days, 218-219; observances, 219-220; early beliefs, 220.

REVOLT: Pársi (618), 185 note 1; Mándvi, (1810), 198 note 5.

RHIAL: Persian coin, 233.

- RIOT: Broach (1857), 193 and note 3.
- ROMANS: as chief traders in the Persian Gulf (513), 185 note 4.
- RESOM ALANEK: of Surat, leading English broker, visits Delhi, 196 and notes 1 and 3; 197 and 2.
- RUSTAM MEHRBÁN: of Persia, makes copies of the Van-lidáil, 180 note 2.
- RUSTAMPURA: a Surat city ward, 193 note 1. A Pársi colony in the Pauch Mihalás, 200.
- SADRA: sacred shirt, 201; 227; clothing the child with, 231. See Narzot.
- SAFAND: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (13).
- SANGREJI: sand, 223 note 1.
- SANJÁN: Pársi settlement in (716), 185, 221; fall of (1315), 187. Fire, holy fire of Behráim, is taken to the Bhárat hills (1315), to Bánsda, 187, to Navsári (1419), 183, to Surat (1733); re-taken to Navsári (1736), 192, taken to Balsár (1741), to Udvada (1742), 193, 183 note 2; temple for, at Sanján, 185; at Navsári, 183. See Atesh Behráim.
- SÁSSANIAN: kings (226-650), revival of Persian power under, 183 note 4.
- SATAN: see Ahrimán.
- SATAYES: principal star of the West, is supposed by Dr. Geiger to be the star Vega, 217 note 1.
- SATHI: see Chhathi.
- SONOZARSHIP: centres of Zend and Pehlvi 194. See Education.
- SCHOOLS: see Education.
- SETARZAN: early form of marriage, 233 note 2.
- SETTLEMENTS: Pársi, in Diu (about 700), 184; in Sanján (716), 185; in Cambay (900-1100), 186 and note 1; in Cheul (968), in Navsári (1142), 186; in Varávar, 186 and notes 1 and 9; in Ankleshvar (1358), in Broach (1300); in Chandrvati (15th century), 189; in Thána, Vankánir, 186; in Bombay (before and after 1686), 195, 199 note 1.
- SETUDGAR: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (2).
- SETUDGAR: part of Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (1).
- SETUD YASHTS: see Setudgar.
- SHÁER: ancestor of the Udvada priests, 221.
- SHAHÁZAN: royal marriage, marriage of a maid, 233 and note 1.
- SHÁPUR SUHERIAR: first priest to settle in Sanján with his family (716), is claimed as ancestor by all Gujarát priests except those of Cambay, 221.
- SHARIVAR: Amshaspad; fourth day of the Pársi month, sixth month of the Pársi year 217, 218.
- SHARIVAR JASAN: high festival day, 217. See Jasans.
- SHUKSHANIS: a division of the Pársi community, meaning of, 193 note 2; 194. See Disputes (Religious).
- SHIRÁZ: capital of Persia, 183 note 1.
- SHIRIN: picture of, in Ajanta caves, 183 note 4. See Ajanta.
- SIDDHARAJA: king of Anahilvada, 186 note 5.
- SIKANDAR: Emperor, destroys fire altars, 188 note 4.
- SIND: fire temples found in (916), 186; parts of, belonged to the Gabres, 188 note 4; rulers of, connected by treaties with Naushirván the Just, 183 note 4.
- SIRIUS: star, 217 note 1. See Teshtar.
- SIROZAN: (30 days) calendar, 212 note 1.
- SISTAN: see Yezdán.
- SOMA: Vedic plant, 229 note 1. See Hom.
- SONG: marriage, 234 note 1.
- SOPARA: procession in fore-marriage observances, 235.
- SORABJI KAREWJI: renders great service to the English (1760); visits Delhi; said to have been taught watchmaking by a European; mends a clock for the Mughal Emperor; receives the title of Nek Suktán and other high distinctions from the Emperor, 197 note 2.
- SOSIROS: looked-for son of Zarathustra, 213.
- SPEERON: see Education.
- SPEYROMAD: third Gáthá Day, 218. See Gáthás.
- SRIKOEL: Dr., explains the word Zend, 211 note 1.
- SPIRITS: evil, belief in, 213; possession, belief in; employment of oracles to drive out, 220; searers, 205 and note 1, 206 and note 1; Earth, 206; place, belief in, 205; Water, 205, 216.
- STARS: veneration for, 213. See Beliefs (Leading).
- STAVORINUS: Dutch traveller (1774), describes the Surat Páris, 196-196.
- SUN: veneration for the, 213.
- SUN FEST DAY: 216. See Meher Jasan.
- SURAR: City of, transfer of, to the British (1759), 185; some of the words of, named after Pársis, 196 note 1; great fire in (1867), 193; Sanján priests come to, (1733) with the Sanján fire, 192; centre of Zend and Pehlvi scholarship, 194; Madrasa in, 204; Castle, comes under the British command (1760), 197 note 2; Dock, managed by Pársi carpenters, 192 note 3.
- SUTALDEV: a Gabri chief, 188 note 2.
- TABARI: (838-921), 183 note 4.
- TADURS: offerings of vows and presents to, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
- TADI: palm-juice, 207, 209.
- TOUENGRIGHATONAH: Indian Bráhmán, is sent back to convert his countrymen, 183 note 4.
- TRUPLES: Fire, for the holy fire of Behráim, at Sanján, 185; at Navsári, 188; Kndmi, in Bombay, 193 note 2; description of Gujarát, 213; the chief, 214-215; worship in, 215; list of Atesh Behráims, 217; of Agiáris, 247-251. See Religion.
- TESHTAR: star Sirius, 217 note 1.
- THÁNA: early trade connection of, with Persian Gulf, 183 note 1; Pársi settlement in, 186;

INDEX.

- coasts of, Khalif Umar sends a fleet to ravage (638-639), 183 note 4.
- THEVENOT: (1660), describes the Pársis, 191.
- TIMUR: his rigorous rule in Persia and Upper India, 188 and note 3; his invasion of India, 188 note 4.
- TIR: fourth month of the Pársi year, 218.
- TOWER OF SILENCE: Dokhna, 239, 240; description of; foundation ceremony, opening ceremony, 240 note 1; beliefs about the first body to be laid in, 195 note 3, 240 note 1; list of, 240 note 1, 253-254.
- TUHLIKHUFER: people of, said to have acknowledged Yazdan and Ahimán; Maglus of, are believed by Professor Dawson to be the relics of the old Upper India Pársis; infidels of, are believed by Wilford to be Manichæan Christians, 188 note 4.
- TURNER'S POUNDING: ceremony pertaining to marriage, 233. See Marriage.
- UCHA: probably Uch.
- UCH: in the Panjab, Pársi settlement in (1184); connection of the Pársis of, with those of Cambay, 186 note 1, 188 note 4.
- UNEPUR: family of, said to have sprung from the son of Khosru Parviz, 183 note 4.
- URABDA: village of, 8 steen miles south of Balsar, ranjân fire finally remains at, 185 note 2, 193.
- URJON KHÂN: brother to Alâ-ud-din, sometimes by mistake is called Alp Khân, conquers Gajarât (1290-1297), 187 note 3. See Alp Khân.
- UMAR: Khalif (634-643), founds the city of Basra, sends fleets to ravage the Thina coasts, 183 note 4.
- USAN CHRYAM: astronomer, is directed by Jâli-ud-din Malik Hâdh, king of Persia, to make a calendar, 191 note 2.
- USTAT: second Gâthâ Day, 218. See Gâthâs.
- UTHAMNA: rising from mourning, ceremony relating to, observances in, 242. See Death.
- VADHÁVO: presents, giving of, during pregnancy ceremony, 229. See Pregnancy.
- VADIA: family of, among early Pársi settlers in Bombay, 195. See Lavji.
- VAHISTA MATHRA: part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (3).
- VANANT: star of the South, identified with the star Fomalhaut, 217 note 1.
- VANDIDÂD: original part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (20); preserved portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1; original copy of, said to have been lost, 189 note 2; Herbad Mahyar brings copy of, from Yazd to Uch, 186 note 1; 188 note 4, 189 note 2; copies of, made in Cambay, 189 note 2; Zend and Pehlvi copy of, is left in India by the Persian priest Jâ nasp, 191; Code, 226.
- VÂNKHÂNIR: Pársi settlement in, 186.
- VANRAT: village of, near Surat, Pársi settlement in, 186 and notes 1 and 9; heroic defence by the Pársi female warriors of, against the troops of the Ratanpur chief, 186 note 9. See Ratanpur.
- VAR-RÂJA: bridegroom. See Marriage.
- VASTERION: husbandman, a class of the old Persian community of, 213.
- VBUETOAST: fifth Gâthâ Day, 218. See Gâthâs.
- VENFRATION: objects of, 219, 215-216. See Beliefs (Leading), Religion.
- VISPARAD: preserved portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1; 226; copy of, made at Ankleshvar, 186.
- VISPARATU: see Visparad.
- VISTASHP: Nusks, original part of the Zend Avesta, 211 note 2 (11); preserved portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.
- VORUKHSHATRA: fourth Gâthâ Day, 218. See Gâthâs.
- VOWS: Goths, offerings of; objects of; names of, 230-231. See Customs.
- WAITE: Sir Nicholas, 196 note 3.
- WATER: veneration for, 218. Spirit, angel, 216, 217; spirit feast. See Avan Ardivisur Jasan.
- WEGA: star, 217 note 1.
- WELL: observances at the time of digging, 206, 206. See House.
- WESTERGAARD: 183 note 4; 183 note 5; 186 note 7; 189 note 2; 191 note 1; 211 note 1.
- WHITE HUNS: struggles of the Persians with, 183 note 4. See Huns.
- WIDOW MARRIAGE: 239 and note 3. See Châkârzan.
- WILFORD: 183 note 4; 185; 187 note 4; 188 note 4.
- WILSON: Dr. J., 185 note 3; 187 note 3.
- WITCHCRAFT: belief in, 220. See Beliefs (Early).
- WOMEN: education of, 201; in her periods, 220; wool-spinning by, of the priestly class, 209 and note 2, 222.
- WORSHIP: place of, See Temples (Fire).
- WORSHIPFULS: see Yazads.
- YASNA: ceremony, during ordination of Nâvar, 225, of Maratab, 226.
- YASNA: portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.
- YASHTS: portion of the Zend Avesta, 212 note 1.
- YATHREH: the fourth Gabambâr, 218. See Gabambârs.
- YAZADS: the, Worshipfuls; veneration for; days and months named after, 215, 216; angels, prayers recited in honour of, 206.
- YAZATAS: angels, 211 note 2 (1); 217 note 1.
- YAZDEZARD: Shah of Persia, defeated by the Arabs (638, 641), '83; 185; his son takes the Persians to China, '83 note 4.
- YEZD: town of, in Persia, 186 note 1; 189 note 2.
- YEZDSTÂN: see Yazd.
- YINTAK: Arabic name for Nâdur, 211 note 2 (6).
- YUKZAN: early form of marriage, 238 note 2.

ZAND : meaning of, 211 note 1. - See Zend.

ZARATHUSTRA : see Zoroaster.

ZARTHUSTRO DISO : anniversary of the death of Zoroaster, a leading high day, 219. See Festivals (reason).

ZEND : language of the Parsi holy books, 204; commentary or translation, 204 note 1; meaning of, 211 note 1; language of the early fragments, 212.

ZEND AVESTA : sacred books of the Zoroastrians, literal meaning of; usaks or parts of, 211 and note 2; preserved portions of, 212 note 1; education of layman's sons in, 209-210; of the sons of the priests in, 210, 2 2 and note 2, 226; Sanskrit translation of, 221.

ZOHAK : 216, 220 note 1. See Faridun.

ZOROASTER : the Prophet, 211; brings the true religion from Ahuramazda, 213; his religious connection with India in mythic times, 183 note 4; his miracles, 211 and note 2 (13); 219.

ZOROASTRIANS : followers of Zoroaster, 211; 212; 215; 225.

